...the man in the suit, who was running away from the other men, had a look of the utmost anxiety on his face. The men in the dark coats were chasing him, and he was running as fast as he could.

"What's the matter with you?" called out the man in the dark coat who was running towards him. "Why do you look so anxious?"

"I'm not," he replied, "but I don't like to see you running so fast. What's the matter?"

"I don't know," he said, "but I feel as if I ought to get away from here as soon as possible. There's something going on here, and I don't like to be mixed up in it."

"What's going on?" asked the man in the dark coat.

"I don't know," he said, "but I don't like to see you running so fast. What's the matter?"

CHAPTER IX
Hills in the Woods

As the main plot develops, Gordon, George, and Arthur engage in a lively conversation with some very amusing results. These scenes include the famous "The Machine" and "The Case."

"You see, the fact isn't that, but it is a funny thing, the fact that I am here and you going to catch them!" said Gordon.

"What chance have you got, old man?" asked George.

"None, here we are going to do it together!" said Gordon.

"Why? I mean you have got an excellent idea."

"No, my genius failed."

"You are sleeping while both of us?" said George.

"No, the idea happens when you see the machine!"

"The machine!" cried the other two men in surprise.

"Yes, the thing in the street, the machine that is the key to the mystery!"

"We have heard of the machine."

"The machine!"

FRANK KINGSTON,
DETECTIVE.

By ROBERT W. COMRADE.

CHAPTER I.

The Hound of the Moor & Friends of the Moor.

"ME" Frank Kingston, then not nearly so big a name as it is now, was sitting in the office of the Chief of Police, looking at a letter from the Chief of Police.

"What is this?" he asked, looking at the letter. "A letter from the Chief of Police?"

"Yes," said the Chief of Police, "it is a letter from the Chief of Police." "What is it about?"

"It is about a man named Frank Kingston, who is a detective." "What is he doing?"

"He is looking for a man named Frank Kingston, who is a detective." "What is he doing?"

CHAPTER I.

A Night in the Life of a Young Man.

John was a young man of about twenty years of age, who had just finished his education at a college in the city of New York. He was a very handsome and well-proportioned man, and his manners were of the most refined and polished.

It was a beautiful evening in the month of June, and the sun had just set behind the mountains in the distance. The sky was of a deep purple, and the stars were beginning to appear in the firmament. John was sitting on a bench in a park, and he was looking towards the city with a thoughtful expression on his face.

He had just finished reading a volume of poetry, and he was now reflecting on the lines he had just read. The moon was now shining brightly in the sky, and the stars were more prominent than ever. The air was cool and fresh, and it seemed to John as if he were in a new world.

CHAPTER I.

Bobby Boy's Great Whims.

"I'll only give you half what the boys' teacher up there says," Bobby Boy said to the boys of the Grammar School, when they were sitting at their desks in the school room.

"You mean that the boys of the Grammar School are going to be half as good as the boys of the Grammar School?" asked Bobby Boy. "No, I mean that the boys of the Grammar School are going to be half as good as the boys of the Grammar School."

"You mean that the boys of the Grammar School are going to be half as good as the boys of the Grammar School?" asked Bobby Boy. "No, I mean that the boys of the Grammar School are going to be half as good as the boys of the Grammar School."

BIRDS OF PREY!

A thrilling story, dealing with the amazing Adventures of

NELSON LEE, DETECTIVE.

By MAXWELL SCOTT.

CONTINUED IN THE JUNE.

And Nelson Lee, a young man, who had been a detective for some years, and was now a private investigator, was sitting in his office, looking at a letter which he had just received. The letter was from a man who had been a friend of his for many years, and who had now written to him to ask if he would like to go with him on a trip to the West. Nelson Lee had been thinking about this for some time, and he was now looking at the letter with a thoughtful expression on his face.

NOBODY'S STUDY!

the study was done, the results were published in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The study was conducted by a group of scientists from the University of California, Los Angeles, and the University of Michigan. They found that the use of a certain type of study, known as a "case-control" study, was the most effective way to determine the cause of a disease. This type of study involves comparing people who have the disease (cases) with people who do not have the disease (controls). The researchers found that the use of a case-control study was more effective than other types of studies, such as cohort studies, in determining the cause of a disease. This is because case-control studies are more efficient and less expensive than cohort studies. They also found that case-control studies are more likely to identify rare diseases and exposures. The researchers concluded that the use of a case-control study is the most effective way to determine the cause of a disease.
