SCHOOL HOUSE AGAINST NEW HOUSE!

20 Pages.

Every Wednesday.

October 8th, 1921

THE START OF THE GREAT SCHOOL BATTLE! (Figgins & Co. v. Tom Merry & Co.)

EDITORIAI

My Dear Chums .-

Of course, a great number of my readers everseas have not yet seen the "St. Jim's News." When they do see the clever little supplement, they will find many of their questions answered. In scores of letters I find the predominating wish is to have more information about St. Jim's, the old buildings, etc., but, more especially, concerning the characters, their unofficial interests, along with fresh sidelights on their temperaments. But there is a lot more than this. The charm of the "Sem" is than this. The charm of the "Seam" is event later. It seems ungrateful to turn that every week you, find yournelft away from all the subjects hinted at by amongst eld friends, 60'Arcy terving a far-seeing correspondents, and speak of now comic sturt, without knowing it is now weekly preparame, but it is really funny, "Skimmay" sixting at his desk just as well to deal with the business in writing about "isms," Monty Lowther hand, and the present is our main affair, rolling off puns, some ancient, some as after all. Fresh as the morning, and Yom Merry the renever was a time when the keeping order. The St. Jim's crowd is fascinating yarns of St. Jim's were a pretty decent crowd, not even except-ing Towser, for Herries' dog means well. If he does worry Mr. Ratcliff that is Ratty's own fault.

**※・◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

There was a letter this week from a reader of fourteen years' standing; he is only twenty now, and he means to keep it up, so you see the fine old paper appeals to readers of all ages; another asking whether the stories are true. True to life they are. Semebedy else is live to life they are. Sentenesy the clocking shead, and asks for a double number at Christmas. Well, his wish will be granted. More news of this great event later. It seems ungrateful to turn away from all the subjects hinted at by followed more closely. They there." Gussy rouses more interest than ever he did, so do George Figgins & Co., and the same with Blake and the others. If Cardew drops out for a week others. If Cardew drops out for a week or two there is trouble, and I receive letters written in vexation of spirit, asking me whether I have forgotten Cardew's action in the story, "The Heart of a Hero," and the "St. Jim's Swimmers," and why such a grand character is allowed to stand aside? Grundy's popularity is well known, but never better thas when the mightly Gaerge Alfred is eclipsed for a time. eclipsed for a time.

eclipsed for a time.

Next week there will be another splendid story dealing with the School House and New House battle, and the first instalment of our great adventure serial,
"The Valley of Surprise." Get the "Gem" early. There will be a recerd demand for this issue.

Your Editor.

ANSWER TO READER.

provide you with the name and address of any of my readers who collect eggs at present. Tom Merry plays centre-forward, or outside-right at footer. He is a clever batsman at cricket, but excels himself at wicket-keeping. Kit Wildhimself at wicket-keeping. Kit Wild-rake collects anything from a stray lion to a cheeky fag, with his lasso, while the anost successful things Skimpole has been ARCHE GILLIES (Strathavon).—Herbert rake collects anything from a stray lion Skimpole collects birds'eggs, but does not meet with much success, because as fast as he obtains freels supplies, George known to collect are thick ears. Abbrey Gore smashes them for him. I cannot Racke is the richest boy in the Shell;

Lumley-Lumley, Harry Hammond, and Cardew in the Fourth. Glyn is not a day boy like Brooke, because Glyn's people pay full fees for him to beard and lodge at the college. Also, because his father's residence, near St. Jim's, is only occupied at certain months in the year. Brooke's people only pay for twition. Your idea of mounting our art plates in an album is top-hole.

A REAL

The orange tin, containing Sharp's Super-Kreem, is a sight irresistible. Its contents are so rich, creamy, and delicious that it is a real delight for everyone to succumb to its fascination.

e by weight or in 4 th, time—also in 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. 9d. time.

50. per 4.16. If unobtainable in your district, kindly send postcard, giving name of your confectioner. E. SHARP & SONS, Ltd., Maidstone. The largest Manufacturers of Toffee in the World.

SHARPS SUPER-KREEM COFFE

" It Speaks for Itself."

WICKEL

VATCH RS TO WEAR WHILST PAYING FOR IT

Gent.'s full-size Keyless Lever Watch. Gent.'s full-size Keyless Lever Watch, strong Nickel Silver, dust and damp-proof cases, clear dial, genuine Lever Movement, perfect railway timekeeper, price 15/- or cash with order 13/6. Ladies' or Gent.'s wristlet model (a beauting present) 4/- extra. Any of these splensid watches and on receipt of the first pay-ment. After receiving the watch you send us a further 2/- and promise to pay send us a further 2/- and pagmise to pay the balance by weekly instalaments of a e. e.c.h, or 2/- monthly. Warranty for 18 years sent with each watch. No ou-pleasant inquiries. Don't sick disappoint-ment, as this is manufacturer's slock, purchased at great reduction (usually solid-ate 26/-). Send 2/- and 8/- extra for particular works and insurance at once to: THE WOBJEN WATCH CO. (Deck 6: 4), WobJEN House, London, W.C.1.

LUMINOUS DIALS TO SEE TIME IN THE DARK - EXTRA

Complete Story of the Chums of St. Grand Long Clifford. By Martin

CHAPTER 1. Very Mysterious.

ASTER D'ARCY?"

"Yaas, deah boy." Tasa, dean boy.

The youth who addressed Arthur Augustus
D'Arcy was a tattered little urchin of about ten.

But Arthur Augustus might have been speaking to the heir of a dukedom to judge by the gracious politeness of Augustus his reply. He stopped, and bestowed a benevolent smile upon the tattered youth. Blake and Herries and Digby stopped also. The four Fourth-Formers of St. Jim's were taking a little stroll out of the gates before tea, when the tattered youth emerged from a hedge and intercepted them.

"You Master D'Arcy?" asked the lad, eyeing the swell Blake and Herries and Digby stopped also.

of St. Jim's.

Yaas."

"Twe got a letter for you, then. I've been told to 'and it to you into your own 'ands."
"All wight, deah boy," said Arthur Augustus graciously.
"You can hand it ovah."

Arthur Augustus extended a slim and delicate hand for the Arthur Augustus extended a simil and outcode factor which the tattered youth produced from inside a cost about eleven sizes too large for him.

Blake & Co. looked on rather curiously.

It was rather unusual for a letter to be delivered to a St.

Jim's junior in this way, and they were a little surprised.

"Any answah, my boy?" asked Arthur Augustus, as he took the letter.

"Not that I knows on, sir," "Not that I knows on, sar," And the statered lad, touching his cap, disappeared through the hedge again, leaving Arthur Augustus with the letter in his hand, and his chums regarding him inquiringly.

"Well, what the thump does that mean?" inquired Jack Blake, "Who's sending you giddy, mysterious letters in this

Blake. "Who is seening you gutuy, mysterious letters in this way, Gussy?"
D'Arcy shook his heed.
"I weally do not know, Blake."
"You don't know who's sent you that letter?" demanded

"I baven't an ideah, deah boy."
"Jolly queer!" said Digby.
"Yaas, it stwikes me as wathah queeah," assented Arthur

Augustus.

"It's more than rather queer — it's thumping queer!" said Blake. "Backe of the Shell has little notes sometimes "Bai Jove! I twust you do not suppose that I should weceive a note fwom a bookmakah, Blake?" ejaculated Arthur Augustus.

ugustus.
"Well, it's jolly odd! Let's see what's in it."
"Weally, Blake—"
"Open it, fathead!" said Herries.
Arthur Augustus was feeling in his waistooat-pocket.
"I seem to have left my penknife indoors," he remarked.
"Can't you stick you thumb into the envelope?" demanded

"Weally, Blake, I have nevah opened an envelope by stickin' my thumb into it, and I should not like to begin now," said Arthur Augustus. "Pewwaps one of you fellows could lead me a penkuifa."

lend me a penknife?" Jack Blake grunted; but he produced a penknife, and Arthur Augustus carefully slit open the envelope.

The letter he drew from it was written on pink paper, and Arthur Augustus unfolded the letter, and glanced at it, Whisi his churns watched him in great curiosity.

"Well?" demanded three voices in unison.
"Pway don't wowwy deah boys. I haven't wead the lettah yet." Arthur Augustus proceeded to read the letter. Blake and Herries and Digby watched him in growing astonishment.

Herries and Digby watched him in growing astonishment. There were varying expressions upon the noble countenance of Arthur Augustus D'Arcy as he perused the letter, and not one of their escaped the watching eyes of his chums.

He looked astonished first—then keenly interested—then astonished again—then he smiled—and their—amazing to relate—the blushed—and then he smiled and blushed simulrelate—he blushed—and then he smiled and blushed simutaneously.

"Bai Jove!" he said finally.
"Read it out," said the amazed Blake.
"Wevally, Blake—"
"It's not a secret, is it?" asked Digby.
"Not exactly a secwet, deah boy," said Arthur Augustus cautiously.
"But if you fellows will excuse me, I wound wathah not wead this lettah aloud."

"And supposing we won't excuse you?" inquired Blake.
"Then I would wathah not wead it out, all the same, deah boy."

"Look here—"
"Bai Jove! It's close on tea-time!" said Arthur Augustus, glancing at his famous gold ticker. "Let's huwwy in, deah

"What's the hurry, all of a sudden?"

"Well, I have to go out aftah tea, you know."
"I don't know," said Blake. "And you can't go out after tea, as it will be dark and the gates will be locked."
"I shall finish wathah early, Blake."

"Look here, Gussy-

"What the thump does all that mean?" demanded Blake. "Has somebody made an appointment with the ass in that letter ?"

"Looks like it," grunted Herries.
"Then why can't he say so?"
"Blessed if I know!"

"May as well go in to tea," remarked Dig sagely. "I'm hungry hungry."

Blake & Co., considerably mystified, followed their noble chum in at the gates. Arthur Augustus D'Arcy was already striding across towards the School House at a great rate. Figgins & Co., the cheery trio of the New House, were longing about the gateway, and Blake noticed that they were looking after Gussy, with grimning faces.
"Hallo, what's the merry joke?" asked Blake, stopping. George Figgins started a little, and looked round at him. Fatty Wynn and Kerr became grave at once.
"Joke?" repeated Figgins.
"Yes. What were vou grinning like a Cheshire cat for?"

"Joke?" repeated riggms.
"Yes. What were you grinning like a Cheshire cat for?"
saked Blake, staring at the New House juniors suspiciously.
"Thinking of the way you played footer in the last House match, old chap," answered Figgins affably.
"You cheeky ass!"

"Same to you, old bean, and many of 'em!" said Figgins cheerily.

"Never mind these New House bounders," grunted Herries.
"Let's get in to tea."
The School House juniors hurried on towards their House, and Figgins & Co. grinned again, and from grinning they proceeded to chuckling, and from chuckling they burst into a yell-of laughter. Evidently Figgins & Co. were in possession of The Gem Library.—No. 713.

some excellent joke, which they had not seen fit to impart to the School House fellows. Jack Blake glanced back from the School House, and observed the trio in a state of great merriment.

Those New House rotters have got something on," said

"Those New House rovers have go such the School House, i'll bet my hat!" said Herries. "I'm hungry!" And the chums of the Fourth proceeded to Study No. 6, in the wake of Arthur Augustus D'Arcy, in quest of tea.

CHAPTER 2.

Thanks from Figgins.

RY Study No. 61" suggested Monty Lowther. Tom Merry and Manners nodded thoughtfully. The three Shell fellows were looking like fellows, in fact, who had a rather deep looking like fellows, in fact, who had a rather deep problem to solve.

They had! There was a dearth of cash in Study No. 10 in the Shell. And it was tea-time.

Shortness of cash and tea-time coming together came as an unhappy coincidence.

After football practice the Terrible Three were very hungry, and also late for tea in Hall, another unhappy coincidence. incidence.

They had looked in at Kangaroo's study, but Kangy was finished, and his supplies were finished, too. They had dropped in on Talbot, but Talbot was out, and Gore was out also; and Skimpole, though beaming with good-humour and hospitality, had nothing to offer but some remarks upon the subject of evolution and the origin of species, culled from the latest work of his favourite author, Professor Balmyfrom the latest work of his tayournic author, professor paimy-crumpet. So the Terrible Three sat Skimpole on the hearth-rug, and wedged the professor's volume down the back of his neck, and retired from the study, hungrier than when they had entered it, and leaving Skimpole in a state of great

Then they looked in on Grundy; but George Alfred Grundy greeted them with the question as to whether he was to be played in the forthcoming football match with Rookwood; and Tom Merry's reply in the negative completely knocked and Yom Merry's reply in the negative competery knocked on the head any prospect of getting asked to tea in Grundy's study. The Terrible Three were, in fact, followed by a stream of eloquence from Grundy as they retreated. And then Monty Lowther suggested Study No. 6 in the Fourth, a celebrated apartment in which the Terrible Three had frequently enjoyed hospitality. And Tom and Manners assented.

"Any port in a storm," said Tom Merry. "If only they haven't had tea yet—" astonishment.

haven't had tea yet—"
"I think they went out of gates," said Lowther. "Anyhow, let's try. If we can't raise a tea there we shall have to hunt up your minor, Manners, and sponge on the Third."
Manners made a grimace.
"I think I'd rather miss tea," he said. "The feeds in the Third Form are a bit worse than famine, as a rule.
Let's try Blake's study."
The Shell fellows hurried along to the Fourth-Form passage, and looked in at the door of Study No. 6, which was half-non.

The study had only one occupant just then. It was Arthur Augustus D'Arcy. That noble youth was standing before the looking-glass, carefully arranging a beautiful tie. There were no signs of tea in the study. "Hallo, Gussy!"

"Hallo, deah boy!" said Arthur Augustus, without turning his head. He was evidently deeply concerned with the set of that necktie.

"Had tea?"

"Not yet, Tom Merry. How do you like this tie?"

"Not yet, Tom Merry. How do you like this tie?" Arthur Augustus turned round from the glass now.
"Ripping!" said Tom Merry. "Top-hole, in fact. Are you going to have tea in the study?"
"Yaas; I think so. Would you weah a diamond pin or a plain gold one with this tie, Tom Mewwy?"
"Both, old chap! Are you going to ask three hungry and stony deserving youths to tea?"
"Bai Jove! Impossible!"
"Impossible to ask us to tea?"
"No no: impossible to wear both tie-pins at once deah

"Impossible to ask us to tea?"
"No, no; impossible to wear both tie-pins at once, deah boy. Do you think the diamond looks all wight on this pale bwonze gween?"
"Bother the tie! We want tea."
"Pewwaps the plain gold one would be bettah," said Arthur Augustus thoughtfully. "Pewwaps she would think the othah can wathah communes." the othah one wathah conspicuous."
"She!" ejaculated Monty Lowther.

"I-I mean-

"Are you going down to the bunshop?" queried Manners.
"Give my kindest regards to Miss Bunn."
THE GEM LIBRARY.—No. 713.

"Weally, Mannahs—"
"Hallo, here's the rest of the family!" said Tom Merry, as Blake and Herries and Digby came along the passage. "Blake, old infant-

"Hallo, what do you Shell-fish want?" inquired Blake. "Tea!" said Manners.

"Hearken unto our tale of woe!" said Monty Lowther.

No grub, no tea, no tin-"You've come to the right shop!" said Blake hospitably. We've got a tin of salmon-

Hear, hear !"

And two tins of sardines-

"Bravo!"

And a three-pound cake-

"Hurrah!"

"And a bag of apples, and some tarts—"
"Come to my arms, beamish boy!" sobbed Monty Lowther.
"And some more, too," said Blake, with great satisfaction.
Three kinds of iam—"

"And some more, too," said Blake, with great Saussacusous.
"Three kinds of jam—" said Herries.
"And a pot of jelly" said Digby.
"Do I sleep, do I dream, or are visions about?" ejaculated Monty Lowther. "Corn in Egypt, in the leanest of lean years! Blake, old son, I always loved you as a long-lost backers! Have you have reiding the stores at Wayland, or brother! Have you been raiding the stores at Wayland, or burgling the larder?"

I've had a remittance," explained Blake. "We've been on rather short commons, and now we're spreading ourselves

"A bit!" said Manners. "A lot, I should say! We'll help you spread!"
"Hear, hear!"

"I was going to ask you chaps!" chuckled Blake. "Gussy, stop fiddling with that silly necktie and help lay the table!"

Weally, Blake-

The Terrible Three beamed with satisfaction. They had ome along to Study No. 6 as a last resource, and, behold, they had found it a land flowing with milk and heney! Many a time they had had their little rows with Blake & Co., but now they beamed with affectionate regard.

"Never mind Gussy!" said Tom Merry, laughing. "We'll lay the table." said Manners. "Blake, old infant, you're a giddy Trojan! I tell you what I'll do, Blake.—I'll take your photograph when I get some new films for my camera, and I'll do, my very best to make it good-looking." "What?"

"I-I mean, I'll do full justice to your good looks-"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Hallo!" roared Herries, in a voice that rang through the study and the passage outside as he threw open the door of the cupboard. "Hallo! Why—what—where's the grub?" "The grub!" repeated Dig. "It's not here!" "What?" "

"What?" roared Blake.
"What?" gasped the Terrible Three.

Blake rushed across to the cupboard. The last time he had looked into it he had seen a handsome stack of supplies for an uncommon spread. And now-for an uncommon spread. And now—Salmon and sardines, cake and tarts, three kinds of jam, all were gone—gone from his gaze like a beautiful dream! The cupboard in Study No. 6, like the celebrated one that belonged to Mrs. Hubbard, was bare!

And in the place of the tuck, for which six hungry pairs of eyes searched in vain lay a half-sheet of impot-paper, with a meaning sprawled on it.

with a message scrawled on it:

"MANY THANKS! G. FIGGINS." "(Signed)

CHAPTER 3. Catching Tartars.

OM MERRY & CO. looked at that brief message from Figgins of the New House—they looked at it, and they looked at one another.

"Figgins!" stuttered Blake.

"Fuf-fuf-Figgins!" gasped Herries.

"It's a House raid!" groaned Digby

"It's a House raid!" groaned Digby. "The grub's gone! Every dashed crumb! Why, those cheeky New House rotters Sold!" said Monty Lowther, with a deep groan.

" Oh dear! "Oh dear!"
"Why, I-I-I'll scalp 'em!" roared Blake. "They—they must have kept an eye on us at the tuckshop, and—and bunked in here after we put the stuff in; that's why they were chortling at the gate!"
"That's why!" said Herries dismally.
"We're going to get it hack!" bawled Digby.

Blake gave a snort.

"Get back grub from Fatty Wynn!" he snapped. "Get butter out of a dog's throat! Do you think Fatty's left a dashed crumb of it by this time?" "The—the fat villain—"

"Dash it all, even Fatty can't have negotiated such a cargo yet!" exclaimed Tom Merry. "Let's cut over to the New House and see! If they've scoffed the tuck we can scalp them, anyhow."

Yes, rather !"

"Come on!" exclaimed Blake. "We'll make 'em sit up,

"Come on anyhow."
"I'm hungry!" mumbled Dig.
"I'm hungry in't the word!" said Monty Lowther. "I'm famished! I could almost eat Baggy Trimble! Let's go over and mop up the earth with those New House bounders, anyhow, and see if there's anything left."
"Come on, Gussy!" was carefully parting his hair before

Arthur Augustus was carefully parting his hair before

Arthur Augustus was carefully parting his hair before the glass. He glanced round...
"Did you addwess me, Blake?"
"Yes. We're going to raid the New House."
"Weally, you know—"
"All hands on deck!" exclaimed Tom Merry. "Join up, ussy."

Arthur Augustus D'Arcy shook his head.
"I am afwaid—" he began.
"Afraid!" roared Herries. "Afraid of the New House "Afraid!" roared Herries. bounders?

"I am afwaid-"Yah! Funk!"

"Weally, Hewwies—"
"Come on, you silly ass!"
"I am afwaid I cannot join in a waid at pwesent," said Arthur Augustus calmly. "It would wumple my clobbah, you know. Leave it till latah, deah boys." you know. L "Fathead!"

"Weally, Blake-

Weally, Diake—
We're going now, and you can back out if you like, you silly image!" said Blake, crushingly.
If we'fuse to be called an image, Blake. And I stwongly

"I wetuse to be called an image, Blake. And I stwongly advise you not to go until I am weady to come with you; you are bound to come a cwoppah if I am not with you."

"Come along circs, deah boy, it is imposs. I have been described by the companion of the compa

"Bump him!" snorted Herries.
"Bai Jove! Hands eff, you uttah asses!" exclaimed Arthur Augustus, in alarm. "If you wumple my clothes—yawooooh!"

The chums of the School House were not much concerned about Gussy's elegant clobber just then. They collared the swell of St. Jim's and bumped him on the hearthrug. Then they rushed out of the study, leaving Arthur Augustus on the rug gasping for breath.

breath.

"Gwoogh! You fwightful wuffians! Oh cwumbs! I will give you a feahful thwashin' all wound!" roared Arthur Augustus wrathfully.

But Tom Merry & Co. were already out of hearing. Arthur Augustus picked himself up and carefully dusted and brushed his elegant "begs." Then he fixed to the fixed to t prushed his elegant bags. Then he gave the final touches to his tie, his collar, his waistcoat, and his cuffs, and walked elegantly out of the study.

Meanwhile, Tome Merry & Co. were speeding down the staircase, and they came out into the quadrangle with a rush.

There was great wrath among the School House heroes. True, they had often raided the New House, and many a time they had bagged a "spread" a time they had bagged a "spread" from their old rivals. But that did not from their old rivals. But that did not alter the fact that Figgins & Co. had to be dealt with severely for their unexampled nerve in raiding Study No. 6. And the juniors had a faint hope, too, of recapturing at least a portion of the raided feed.

There was no sign of Figgins & Co. in the quadrangle; they had gone into the New House. And the six School House juniors sprinted across to the New House to look for them.

An open raid in the enemy's country like this was rather a risky enterpris for in their own House Figgins & Co.

had unlimited reinforcements close at hand. But the School-House fellows were too exasperated to think much about that. And they hoped, too, to take Figgins & Co. by surprise with a sudden on laught.

They crowded into the New House, and found no one to gainsay them, and hurried up the stairs. They were reckless, but they were rather anxious not to meet Mr. Ratcliff, the House-master, or any of the New House prefects. With great relief, they found themselves in the Fourth-Form passage, and they stopped at Figgy's door.

"They're not expecting us, anyhow!" whispered Tom Merry. "Stand ready), you chaps! Rush in as soon as I open the door!"

Merry. "Stand

"You bet!

The captain of the Shell threw the study door of suddenly, and the six School-House juniors rushed in. "Give 'em socks!" roared Blake.

"Give 'em socks!" roared Blake.

Then there was a sudden surprise. Figgins & Co. were in the study; and so were Redfern and Owen, Koumi Rao and Pratt and Digges of the Fourth, and French and Thompson and Jimson of the Shell. Figgins & Co. had been expecting that visit, after all, and they had prepared for it. The study was fairly crammed with New Hose juniors; and the School-House fellows rushed right into the trap. "Here they are!" roared Figgins.

"Collar 'em!"
"Give 'em socks!"

"Give 'em socks!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
The scene that followed in Figgy's study was wild and whirling. The School House invaders put up a terrific fight. But the odds were two to consider they were hopelessly outnumbered and the were hopelessly outnumbered conference. And then, one by one, whizzing a Bobb pagan to leave by the doorway—hurled out on their pucks. Blake was the first to land, then came Tom Merry, then Manners, and they rolled over one another in the passage. Lowther joined them on the floor, and then Herries, and last of all, Robert Arthur Digby, fighting gallantly to the last, with his nose streaming red, and his collar streaming out of the back of his neck. Six dusty, dishevelled and disordered youths rolled breathessly on the floor; and from Figgy's study came a shout of triumph and merriment. and merriment.
"Exit the School House!" chuckled Kerr.

"Ha, ha, ha!"

The swell of the School House struggled frantically, spluttering inside the sack; but he struggled in vain. A faint sound came to his ears through the sack, which was usepicously like a chuckle. "Swear on your faces never to see Qwendoline again, or you die the death of a dog," said a deep bass veloe.

"Kick 'em down the stairs!" shouted Pratt.

"Kick 'em down the stairs' should Fract.
"Give 'em some more!"
"Hurray! Get on with it!"
"Tom Merry & Co. did not wait for any more. They had awakened a hornet's nest, and they realised that they had had enough. A dozen more New House juniors were gathering in the passage, while Figgins & Co. poured out of the study after the defeated invaders.
"Hook it!" gasped Tom.
"Hook it!" gasped Tom.

ot the study after the deteated invaders.

"Hook it!" gasped Tom.
There was clearly nothing else to be done. Six dishevelled youths scuttled down the stairs, followed by howls of laughter and catcalls and hoots. And more laughter greeted the unhappy six when they escaped into the quadrangle and sadly sought the shelter of their own House.

"Looks to me like a New House win!" chuckled George Firegrees.

Figgins.
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ir ather fancy we're cock-house of St. Jim's!" chortled Fatty Wynn. "And what a spread it was, too! So kind of them to stand it!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
Kerr looked at his watch.
"Time we were off!" he remarked. "We shall miss our appointment if we don't get a move on—and we mustn't disappoint Gussy!"

worth living.

CHAPTER 4.

The Letter from Gwendoline !

H dear!" "Oooooooh!" "Grooogh!

"Ow! wow!" The remarks in Study No. 6 were perhaps not very intelligible, but they were expressive.

It was a good half-hour before the hapless juniors began to feel that an earthly existence was not, after all, a deluto seel that an earthly existence was not, after all, a delu-sion and a snare.

By that time they were feeling better, and Tom Merry was even able to grin, rather ruefully, over the disaster.

"After all, we fairly asked for it!" said the captain of the Shell, philosophically. "Of course, Figgy knew well enough that we should be after his scalp for bagging our feed."

"And he was all ready for us!" said Blake dismally.
"Oh dear! I want a new nose! Ow!"
"Wow!" said Herries feeling!y.
"And that cheeky blighter Gussy got clear of it all!" exclaimed Digby indignantly. "Gussy ought to have been with us."

with us."
"He wouldn't have been any good," groaned Manners.
"Still, he ought to have backed up," said Blake warmly.
"Like his thumping cheek to have an engagement out of
"Like his thumping cheek to have an engagement out of doors when the study is on a raid! I'll jolly well snatch him baldheaded when he comes in!"

"Hallo! What's this?" said Herries suddenly.

"Hallo! What's this?" said Herries suddenly.

He stooped and picked up a pink sheet of notepaper from the hearthrug. There was a faint and delicate scent to it, and it was written on in a very small, feminine-looking hand.

Somebody been dropping billets dour about your study, Blake," said Monty Lowther.

Blake glanced at it.,

"Can't belong here," he said. "Oh—ah—yes— Why, that must be the note that was handed to Gussy this afternoon! It was pink. He's dropped it in the study, the ass."

"Wher was humped him. I fearey" said Torn Merry

"When we bumped him, I fancy," said Tom Merry, laughing.
"It's from a lady, I should say," chortled Monty Lowther.
"Has Gusey been falling in love again?"
"Ha, ha, ha!", ather Avenetus D'Arcy in love had a

The thought of Arthur Augustus D'Arcy in love had a cheering effect on the juniors. Arthur Augustus had been in love before, and more than once; and his comrades had always found him exhibitating at such times. George Herries always found him exhilarating at such times. George Herries was staring blankly at the note.

"A such as catch!" he said.
"A harry asked Tom.
"Somebody's pulling Gussy's leg," said Herries with conviction. "A girl wouldn't write this rot."
"Gussy was born to have his leg pulled," remarked Blake.
"May be a New House catch. Let's look!"
Blake took the pink note and started reading it out. It began:

"Dear Loved One."
THE GEM LIBRARY.—No. 713.

"Oh, my only hat!" interrupted Tom Merry.

Blake paused a moment.
"A fellow can't read another fellow's letter," he said. "But this must be a spoof—and we're bound to look after Gusy. He's not responsible for his actions, you know. If anybody is pulling his silly old leg, it's up to his pals to see that he comes to no harm. You chaps agree?"

"Yes, rather!" said Digby.

And the Terrible Three nodded assent. It was agreed on all hands that Arthur Augustus D'Arcy would not have been grateful for their kindness in this respect; but that could not be helped. Jack Blake restarted on the letter, and read it out to the finish. It was really a very interesting letter.

"Dear Loved One,—Am I bold in thus addressing you? If I am, forgive me! I have seen you—but never yet have we spoken! O why, why did my eyes ever fall upon your fatal beauty? Grant me one word—one word only! Every day at five o'clock I will wait by the old oak in the School Coppice, and hope that you will come. Only one word—one glance! That is all that is asked by your unhappy admirer. Do not breathe a word of this.

"GWENDOLINE." "GWENDOLINE."

"Great Christopher Columbus!" ejaculated Monty Lowther. "Who the merry dickens is Gwendoline?"

Blake snorted.

"New name for a New House bounder, I imagine," he answered. "That rubbish can't be serious. It looks like a girl's handwriting, but Kerr of the Fourth can put in any fist likes in a letter. It's a spoof, of course; and that howling ass Gusey has swallowed it!"
"And that's where he's gone?" exclaimed Tom.
"You bet!"

"That's why he was so particular with his necktie," gasped Monty Lowther. "Ha, ha, ha!" 'The awful ass-

"That's why he wouldn't show us the letter!" snorted Herries. "And that's why Figgins & Co. were chuckling at the gate—it wasn't on account of bagging our spread. They'd seen that kid hand the note to Gussy, and knew that he was hooked!"

Jack Blake frowned deeply.

That touching epistle from Gwendoline might impose upon the simple and unsuspicious mind of the Honourable Arthur Augustus D'Arcy, but it was not likely to impose upon the other fellows in Study No. 6.

the other fellows in Study No. 6.

"Queer thing that any infant of six could pull Gussy's leg, and not half try!" said Blake in deep disguet. "If I'd got a letter like this—"
"Or I—" growled Herries.

"You wouldn't be likely to," chuckled Tom Merry. "It's only Gussy who's likely to get this kind of merry epistle. And he's actually gone to keep the appointment."

"Kept it before this!" said Digby.
"I wonder what's happened to him.—"
"The thumping ass! It's a New House stunt, of course—that," why they've asked him to keep it dark. They knew hashes and the state for the state of the sta Ane countying ass: 10 s a vew House stuft, that's why they've asked him to keep it dark, we'd ameil a rat fast enough."

"Yes, rather!"
Blake jumped up.

Biake jumped up.

"He's not back yet." he said. "Let's hike along to the coppice, and see what's happened to the howling ass. He's our chum, though he's a born idiot. Come on!"

"What about tes?" asked Dig.

"Oh, blow tes!"
But I'm hungry—"

"I'm hungry, too!" said Herries.
"Oh, come on!" exclaimed Blake, and he led the way from the study, and Dig and Herries followed him. The Terrible Three exchanged glances. They were hungry—quite hungry—in fact, seriously hungry. But they felt that it was up to "Come on!" said Torn.

And the Shell fellows followed the Fourth-Formers from the School House. In a few minutes they were speeding down the lane to the coppice, wondering very much what they would discover there, but quite certain that it would not be Gwendoline!

CHAPTER 5. Meeting Gwendoline I

"B AI Jove! Not heah yet!"
Arthur Augustus D'Arcy murmured the words as he glanced round him in the shady coppies.
The school coppies, as it was called, was about ten minutes' walk from the gates of St. Jim's. It was a quiet and secluded spot, and on summer evenings was sometimes haunted by pairs of lovers from the village; and occasionally it was visited by fellows who had a fight on. On this afternoon in late autumn it was very shady and dusky and quiet. Arthur Augustus stopped under the old oak, and smiled as he looked round in search of Gwendoline.

A request from a lady would have dragged Arthur Augustus anywhere. And the fact that the lady was smitten by his fatal beauty was, of course, an additional incentive in this case. The owner of fatal beauty was bound to be kind and considerate to its hapless victims.

Arthur Augustus was prepared to be very kind to Gwendoline, and to soothe the lovelorn young lady to the utmost of his power.

That the pink, scented note was not genuine was a suspicion that had not even occurred to his noble mind. Gwendoline had that had not even occurred to his noble mind. Gwendoline had asked him to breathe no word—and he had breathed no word. He had only arrayed himself in his most killing attire, and arrived early to meet Gwendoline. But Gwendoline wasn't there.

Arthur Augustus waited five minutes—ten minutes—listening anxiously for a footstep in the coppice. But there was no footstep.

"Wemarkable!" murmured D'Arcy, at last, He could not halp wondering what was detaining the lady.

He could not help wondering what was detaining the lady.

He could not help wondering what was detaining the lady. Gwendoline only wanted one word—one glance—according to the statement in the pink letter, and she had already wasted time enough for no end of words and glances.

But Arthur Augustus did not think of departing. It was up to him to see Gwendoline through. At least, he felt that he was bound to remain upon the epot, and give Gwendoline a chance—until the school gates were locked. He was not quite sure whether chivalry demanded that he should miss lock-up and cut call-over. He was sure, however, that Mr. Railton, his Housemaster, would not regard Gwendoline as a sufficient reason for missing call-over; and he sincreely honed sufficient reason for missing call-over; and he sincerely hoped that Gwen would turn up in time to let him return to St. Jim's before his name was called from the roll.

before his name was called from the roll.

He looked at his watch several times, and paced up and down under the big oak. Then he leaned against the gnarled old trunk and waited. It occurred to him that perhaps he had mistaken the time of the appointment, and he felt in his pocket for the letter. It was not there!

"Bai Jove! I must have dwopped it in the studay!" murmured Arthur Augustus. "How vewy wotter! But I am almost suah of the time! I will give the deah young thing until lock-up, anyhow."

And he waited; but the dear young thing did not appear. But suddenly, from behind the old oak

But suddenly, from behind the old oak upon which the swell of St. Jim's was leaning, a large open sack came swooping-so suddenly, so unexpectedly, that it was down over Gussy's head before the Was down over Gussy's nead before the knew what was happening. Some unseen person had crept silently behind the oak, and reached round it, and bagged the unsuspecting Gussy—bagged him completely! The sack went down over his shoulders, and Gussy's noble head and silk hat were inside it; and Gussy gasped and spluttered in wild surprise surprise.

"Gwoogh! Oh, bai Jove! What fashful wottah— Gwoogh!"
He clutched at the sack to throw it off. But two pairs of hands were upon him the next second, and he was held on either side; and a third pair of hands held the sack and dewn it down more. on either side; and a third pair of hands held the sack, and drew it down more tightly over him. The swell of the School House struggled frantically, spluttering inside the sack; but he struggled

"Welease me! Gwooogh! cwumbs! Yawoooh!"

There was no sound from the kid-There was no sound from the kid-nappers—in words, at least. Gussy could only hear an occasional panting breath. His arms were held as if in a vice, down to his sides, and the sack was pulled lower, till the neck of it was round his waist. Then a rope was run round it and knotted, and Gussy was a helpless prisoner, with his arms inside the sack and his silk hat crunched down unconfortable very his aves down uncomfortably over his eyes.

"Gwooogh!"

He was released now, and he stag-gered wildly away from the tree. He gered which away from the tree. He could see nothing; the sack shut out all view. He strove to drive his elbows through it, careless now of his nobby jacket; but he strove in vain; the sack was too strong for him.

"You feahful wuffians!" Arthur Augustus' voice came muffled from the sack. "Welease me! I will give you a feahful thwashin' for this! Gwoogh! I am neahly suffocatin'! Oh deah! Who are you, you awful wottahs?"

"Silence!" came a deep bass voice.

"Wats! I wefuse to be silent!

"Wats! I wetuse to be stent!"
"Silence! What are you doing here, in this haunted grove?" came the deep voice.
"Wubbish! It is not a haunted gwove. I am heah to meet somebody!" gasped Arthur Augustus. "I ordah you to welease me at once, you awful beasts!"
"Are woul here to meat Gwendoline?"

welease me at once, you away your wall was a wall was you wortan!"
"Yasa, you wottah!"
"Aha! You are in the hands of your rival!" said the deep
"Aha! You are in the hands of your rival!" said the deep
"Aha! You are in the hands of your rival!" said the deep voice, deeper than ever now. "Base caltiff—"

"Bai Jove! I wefuse to be chawactewised as a caitiff!"
gasped Arthur Augustus. "I do not know what it is, but I wefuse to allow you to call me anythin' of the kind. I wegard you as a wank outsidah!"

A faint sound came to his ears through the sack, which was suspiciously like a chuckle. But the deep bass voice went on at once:

"Swear on your knees never to see Gwendoline again, or you die the death of a dog!"

"I wefuse to do anything of the sort!"
"To your knees!"

"Wats!

"Put him on his knees, my trusty minions!"
"Bai Jove! Mind my twousahs!" yelled Arthur Augustus, as he was bumped down on his knees in the grass. Again there was a sound like a chuckle.
"Now swear—"

"Wats!"

"Prick him with your dagger, Giorgio!"
"Yawoooh!" yelled Arthur Augustus, as something sharp touched his leg. It felt more like a pin than a dagger; but "Listen, base caitiff!" said the deep voice. "Gwendoline shall be mine! Already she lies a captive in the moated grange. Swear never to attempt her rescue!

I wefuse-

"I wetuse—
"Or this my trusty dagger shall be deep imbrued in thy heart's blood!" hissed the unknown.
"Gweat Scott!"

"Help!" yelled Arthur Augustus. "Wescue! Help!"

Three juniors had to lean on the door of the crowded study for support while they supped; and there were three startled jaculations as it was suddenly pushed open from outside. A cup of coffee descended on the floor with a creah—the cup reaching the floor, and the coffee being distributed chiefly over waistocats and trousers. "I say you chaps—"Trimble blinked in. "Get out!" shelked Levison.

There was a sound of footsteps in the coppice, and a voice called. Even through the sack Gussy recognised Blake's

Gussy-

"This way!" yelled Arthur Augustus. "Help! Wescue!"
"My hat! Hook it!"

Arthur Augustus heard the sounds of his persecutors fleeing through the coppice, in one direction, while footsteps approached from the other. He knew that his chums were at hand, and he stumbled to meet them, and bumped into a tree and rolled over, with a muffled roar.

"Gwoogh! Help! Wescue! This way, deah boys!

Wescue!"
"Ha, ha, ha!" roared Blake. "Here he is!"

"Gussy-"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Wescue-

The rope was cut, and the sack jerked from Gussy's head. He sat up dazedly, and a battered topper rolled in the grass. Six School House juniors were round him, laughing; but of his persecutors no trace was to be seen. They had vanished "Oh deah!" gasped Arthur Augustus.
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Weally, deah boys—"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"It is not al." through the coppice.
"Oh deah!" gaspe

"It is not a laughin' mattah!" yelled Arthur Augustus indignantly.

But Tom Merry & Co. evidently thought that it was. They roared and yelled, till the tears ran down their cheeks.

"Where's Gwendoline?" roared Blake. "Did Gwen bundle you up in that sack, Gussy?"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
And Tom Merry & Co. roared again.

CHAPTER 6. Nice for Arthur Augustus!

RTHUR AUGUSTUS D'ARCY scrambled to his feet. He was dusty from the dusty interior of the old sack, He was dusty from the dusty interior of the old sack, and his natty "clobber" was in rather a sad state. But for once Arthur Augustus did not think of that. Even his elegant clobber took a second place to the peril of Gwendoline. He groped for his eyeglass, jammed it into his eye, and scanned his comrades with great indignation. "You utthat asses—" he gasped. "Ha, ha, ha!"
"It is not a laughin' mattah, I tell you—"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"I have been tweated outwareously—"

"I have been tweated outwageously—"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"A young lady is in feahful pewil—"
"Gwendoline?" sobbed Blake.
"Yaas, wathah!"
"Ha, ha, ha!" shrieked Tom Merry & Co.
"Pway let me explain!" gasped Arthur Augustus breathsaly. "L-I came here to—to—to—"
"To meet Gwen!" sobbed Blake. "We know all about it,

"To meet Gwen!" sobbed Blake. "We know all about it, old top; we picked up Gwen's letter in the study—"
"Bai Jowe! You had no wight to look at it, Blake. Howerah, I will not tweat you severely on that account, as it has led you to come to the wescue. I was seized here by thwee feashful williams armed with daggahs—"
"Daggers! Oh, my hat!"
"They are keepin' Gwendoline a pwisonah—"
"Bh!"
"Where?" gasped Tom Merry.
"In the moated gwange—"
"The which?" yelled Monty Lowther.
"The moated gwange—s moated gwange somewhah." said

"The mostle yearless among powers," The mostle gwange somewhah," said Arthur Augustus. "They wanted me to sweah not to attempt her wescue. Of course, I wefused to do anythin' of the sort. I am goin' to wescue her or pewi "Gwendoline, of course.

Blake threw himself into the grass, and kicked up his heels, almost in hysterics. Tom Merry leaned against the old oak and sobbed

"I fail to see any weason whatevah for this wibald mewwi-ment!" shouted Arthur Augustus hotly. "A young lady is in feahful pewil. I call on you to wally wound to the wescue.

in teahul pewil. I can on you or many to the those wuffans—"
"What ruffanse?" gasped Tom Merry.
"Those teahul wuffans you wescued me fwom! Did you see anythin' of them befoah they cleahed?"
"Oh dear!" sobbed Tom Merry. "We saw them!"
"What were they like?" asked Arthur Augustus eagerly.
"We are bound to twack them down, deah boys, and wescue Considering from the dimean in the moated gwange!"

we are bound to twack them down, deah boys, and wescue Gwendoline from the dangeon in the moated gwange!"

"Like?" bebbled Blake. "Oh dear! They were remarkabl like Figgins & Co. of the New House!"

"Wha-at?"

THE GEM LIBRARY .- No. 713.

"Don't you catch on, you ass?" roared Herries. "Those fellows who put you in the sack were Figgins & Co.!"
"Wubbish!"

"Figgins, Kerr, and Wynn!" spluttered Tom Merry.
"They got away before we could collar them, but we saw them plainly enough!"

Arthur Augustus stared at the School House juniors. His celebrated monocle dropped from his eyes in his amazement.

"Figgins & Co.!" he gasped at last.
"Ha, ha! Yes."
"Imposs!" stattered Arthur Augustus.
pwicked me with a daggah..."
"A pin, more likely." "One of them

"A pin, more likely.
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"But—but they said Gwendoline was a pwisonah in a moated gwange!" babbled Arthur Augustus.
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Are you—are you quite such that—that they were Figgins & Co. of the New House?" stammered D'Arcy.
"Ha, ha! Quite!"
"The awful wottahs! Then—then they must have been pullin' my leg!"
"Has that just dawned upon you?" asked Monty Lowther screatically."

"Has that just dawned upon you?" asked Monty Lowther sarcaxically.
"The feahful wottahs: I will give them a feahful thwashin' all wound!" exclaimed Arthur Augustus holty. "I wegard such a joke as bein' in the vewy worst of taste-especially as I was heath to meet a young lady, who has not yet awwired. Pewwaps you fellows had bettah wetire fwom the scene." "Eh?"

"You see, Miss Gwendoline would hardly care to see a cwowd of fellows when she awwives!" explained Arthur Augustus. Blake shrieked.

"You howling ass, there isn't any Gwendoline! It was one of the New House rotters wrote you that note, and tipped a kid to hand it to you. If you'd shown it to us, we'd have told you so at once!"
"Wats!"

"Wats!" Arthur Augustus said "Wats!" but he said it half-heartedly. It was beginning to dawn upon his noble brain now that he had been spoofed, and that Gwendoline's right name was probably George Francis Kerr, of the Fourth Form and the New House of St. Jim's.

Tom Merry wiped his eyes.
"You'll be the death of me yet, Gussy!" he said, "Come on, you fellows! There's just time to get in before lock-up!"
"But—but weally—" stammered Arthur Augustus.
"Come on, ass!" said Blake.

Arthur Augustus cast a last look round the coppice. Per-haps he still hoped against hope that the letter had been genuire, and that Gwendoline would come tripping along to keep the appointment. But there was no sign of her, and the swell of St. Jim's followed his chums as they started for the school.

school.

Tom Merry & Co. were chuckling all the way back; but Arthur Augustus did not chuckle. The humour of the affair seemed to be absolutely lost on Gusy. His noble face was crimson, and it was growing more and more crimson every moment, as he realised more and more clearly how his a ristocratic leg had been pulled by the sportive youths of the New Houss. The School House fellows had just time to get in before Taggles closed the gates, and they were still chuckling as they headed for the School House. On the steps of the School House D'Arcy minor of the Third was waiting, and he called to his major. called to his major.

called to his major.

"Hallo, Gus!"

"Weally, Wally—

"Figgins left a message for you ten minutes ago," said

Wally, staring at his major. "What's the matter with your chivvy, Gus? You're as red as turkey-cock."

"Wate!"

"Well, Figgins left a message," said Wally. "He says, if you want to see Gwendoline, you can call at the New House. Blessed if I understood what he was driving at; but he said that the message we important." that the message was important.

"Ha, ha, ha!" roared Tom Merry & Co.
Arthur Augustus did not reply to his minor, or even thank him for delivering George Figgins' important message. He hurried into the School House with a burning face, leaving Wally of the Third starting.

"What on earth's the matter with Gus, you fellows?" exclaimed the astonished Wally. "Who the thump's Gwendoline, anyhow?"

"Gwendoline, my dear youth," said Monty Lowther, "is like the celebrated Mrs. Harris, in Dickens—there ain't no sich person.'

And Tom Merry & Co. followed Gussy in, leaving D'Arcy minor very much puzzled. Arthur Augustus' face was still burning when he answered "Adsum" to his name at callingover, and after call-over he hurried away to Study No. 6probably to hide his blushes. But he was soon followed there. For Ton Merry & Co. had missed their tea, and that raised the questron of an early supper—the earlier the better; and the burning question to be solved now was, not even vengeance upon the New House, but where supper was to come from for seven famished School House juniors.

CHAPTER 7. Figgins Takes a Hand.

RTHUR AUGUSTUS D'ARCY looked exceedingly sheepish when the six juniors came into the study. But, to his great relief, they did not proceed to chip him on the subject of Gwendoline. For the moment Gwendoline was a back number.

came in.

"We can't wait ill supper-time," said Tom Merry, as they ame in. "I'm famished, for one—"
"Me. for two!" said Lowther.
"And we're all stony!" said Blake dismally. "Not that that makes much difference, as the tuckshop is closed now.

that makes much difference, as the tuckshop is closed now."

"Those New House brutes made a clean sweep while they were about it," remarked Herries, staring into the desolate study cupboard. "Not a giddy crumb left!"

Arthur Augustus looked up.

"I am wathah hungwy," he remarked.
"We shall have to raid somebody," said Tom Merry. "What about rushing Grundy? He's generally got a lot of stuff in his study. He's a cheeky ass. He wants to play footer against Greyfriars in the next match. Suppose we fine him a feed for six. as a punishment?"

footer against Greyfriars in the next match. Suppose we have him a feed for six, as a punishment?"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Weally, Tom Mewwy—"

"All your fault, Gussy!" said the captain of the Shell.

"We should have fixed up something before call-over, if you hadn't been mooning after Gwendoline!"

"We should have fixed up something before call-over, if you hadn't been mooning after Gwendoline!"

"Wats! I was going to make a suggestion—"
"Don't bother," said Blake. "What we want is supper!"
"I have an invitation to an early suppah—"

"I have an invitation to an early suppah—"
"Oh, good! Can you pass it on to a chum?"
"It is like this, deah boys," said Arthur Augustus. "I have been asked to a feed in Studay No. 9—Levison, Clive, and Cardew, you know. I undahstand that Cardew has had a large hampah fwom Lord Weckness, and as he is a distant welation of mine, he has vewy kindly asked me to the feed. Levison asked me to bwing a fwiend, if I liked, or a fwiend or tree." two.

There was a general brightening of faces in Study No. 6. Amore was a general originening or laces in Study No. 0. Cardew's handsome supplies from his wealthy grandfather were well known, and the thought of a large hamper of tuck made six hungry mouths water just then.

"Affend or two!" said Blake thoughtfully.

" Could that be stretched into meaning a friend or six?" asked Monty Lowther.
"Bai Jove!"

"Any port in a storm," said Manners. "Gussy, you can trot along to Study No. 9, with your friend or two. I'm your friend. In fact, if you stand me a supper, I'm your friend for "You can look on me as a long-lost brother," said Lowther.

"Arthur Augustus nodded.
"I think that pewwaps Levison & Co. will not expect seven chaps to dwop in to suppah," he remarked. "But let's twy it on."

"Hear, hear!"

"Hear, hear!"
"It is a mattah for some tack and judgment," added Arthur Augustus thoughtfully. "I will dwop in first with Blake, and mention that anothah chap or two will be comin'. Then you follows can dwop in one at a time. That will be bweakin' it gently."
"Good!" "Good!"

And Arthur Augustus walked along to Study No. 9, in the Fourth, with Jack Blake. Study No. 9 had a rather festive appearance. Ralph Reckness Cardew, Sidney Clive, and Ernest Levison, were all there The hamper was in the corner of the study, but most of the good things had been transferred from it to the table Levison & Co. greeted the guests cheerfully and hospitably.

I twust we are not too early, deah boys?" said Arthur

Augustus.

"Not at all!" said Clive.

"Just in time," said Levison of the Fourth. "I'm expecting the other guests every minute!"

"The—the other guests;" said Blake.

"Yes; my minor Frank's coming, and he's bringing his pals, Reggie Manners and Wally D'Arcy."

"Oh!"

Arthur Augustus and Blake could not help exchanging a glance. There were eight chairs in the study, most of which had evidently been borrowed for the occasion. But by the time Tom Merry & Co. arrived, a great many more would be needed. It had not occurred to Gussy's noble brain that probably there would be numerous other guests at the feed, and his heart misgave him a little as he thought of Herrics and Digby, and the Terrible Three "Anybody else comin', Levison?" he asked, rather faintly.

"Clive's got a guest

"Clive's got a guest".
"I've asked Kië Wildrake, the Canadian chap," said Clive.
"Quite a little party!" remarked Cardew. "Hallo, here come the Third Form merchants!"
Levison minor and Reggie Manners and Wally came into the study. The three fags looked newly brushed and combed, in hour of the occasion. Joe Frayne of the Third could be nonconting belief." in nonour or the occasion.

"Brot in, kids!" said Levison.

"Mind if we bring Frayne in?" asked Wally.

"Not at al!" said Study No. 9, with one voice and great

"We shall have to get some more chairs from somewhere," remarked Levison. "Cut along the passage, Clive, and see remarked Levison. what you can bag." "Right-ho!"

"Right-hoi" Clive left the study, and while he was gone, Tom Merry drifted in. Levison and Cardew looked at him. They were hospitable, and they liked Tom Merry. But they were beginning to feel that the resources of the study were going to be er severely taxed.

"I asked Tom Mewwy, deah boys," said Arthur Augustus astily. "You mentioned that I might bwing a fwiend cr hastily. "You menuouses two."

"Welcome as the flowers in May!" said Cardew.
"Welcome as the flowers in May!" said Cardew.

Manners and Lowther glanced in at the doorway.
"Twot in, deah boys!" said Arthur Augustus, a little intly. "I asked these two chaps, Cardew, as you said I faintly. "I asked these values in you fellows!"

"Oh! Ah! Yes! C-come in, you fellows!"
"Oh! Ah! Yes! Character in Sidney Clive returned with the surprised at t Manners and Lowther came in. Sidney Clive returned with three chairs, and he seemed a little surprised at the addition that had taken place since his departure to the numbers of the supper-party. Levison made him a sign, and he departed in quest of more chairs.

Herries and Digby strolled into the study.
There wasn't much room in Study No. 9 by this time for strolling, as a matter of fact; it was more like wedging.
Arthur Augustus looked rather sheepish, and his voice faltered.

"I-I asked these fellows, Cardew-

"As you mentioned that I might bwing a fwiend or two,

"As you measured that "man and the property of the Man Yes! Of course!"
Wildrake of the Fourth was the next in. When Sidney Clive relucted with two more chairs, there was some difficulty in introducing the chairs into the study, and still there were made the chairs," said Jack Blake. "I can sit on the first for one."

the fender, for one.

"I can sit on Gussy's knees," said Lowther.
"Bai Jove! Mind my twousahs!"
"We-we-we're awfully glad to-to see you all, of-of course!" gasped Levison. "I-I hope the grub will go round!"

A fat face blinked into the study doorway, and Baggy Trimble of the Fourth bestowed an ingratiating grin on Study

"I hope I'm in time?" he remarked.
"I hope I'm in time?" he remarked.
"Oh, my hat!" said Levison. "Did you ask Trimble," "Certainly not! I should not be likely to ask Trimble!"

"Did you, Frank?"
"No jolly fear!" answered Levison minor.
"Get out, Trimble!" roared Levison of the Fourth.,
"Look here, you know—" protested Baggy.
"Kick him out!"

"Kick him out!"
"Yaroooh!"

"Yarococh!"

Baggy Trimble was promptly ejec'ed Every member of the supper-party felt that there were enough present, without Trimble. There was by this time a horrid doubt whether or not the "grub" would go round. With Trimble there, that doubt would have become a certainty; the grub wouldn't have gone round. So Trimble was ignominiously ejected into the passage, and the door was closed on him.
It was rather warm in the study now. There were three Shell fellows, eight of the Fourth, and four of the Third.
Junior studies at St. Jim's were not cabined, cribbed, and confined by any means; but certainly they were not built to accommodate fifteen fellows at once. So far as numbers went, the No. 9 supper-party was a great success; but in other accommonate intensity at once. So are as numbers went, the No. 9 supper-party was a great success; but in other particulars there were, perhaps, some drawbacks.

But the numerous party played up manfully, and they handed things round to one another, and kept up a determined handed things round to one arother, and kept up a develorment good-humour. Three juniors had to lean on the door for support while they supped; and there were three startled ejaculations as it was suddenly pushed open from outside. A cup of coffee descended to the floor with a crash—the cup TEE GEM LERREN.—No. 713. reaching the floor and the coffee being distributed chiefly over reaching the noor and waistcoats and trousers.

Trimble blinked in.

"I say, you chaps——" Trimb
"Get out!" shrieked Levison. "I was going to tell you-"Squash him!"

"Figgins—"
Crash! A jam-tart flattened on Baggy Trimble's fat face, Crassi A jam-rat nattened on Baggy Trimble's tat race, and he gave a howl and jumped back into the passage.

"Groogh!"
Lock the door!" said Levison. "There isn't much room for the door to open here.
And Manners turned the key in the lock. Through the seybole came Baggy Trimble's wrathful howl:
Yah! Rolters! I sha'n't tell you now! Groogh!"

" Bunk off!" roared Herries.

And the supper-party went on, with the door locked. It was over rather earlier than had been anticipated; the supplies vanished at an alarming rate before so extensive an enslaught. Tom Merry & Co. felt a little better; but they were ready for opper in Hall, by the time supper was finished in Study No. 9. The study was growing uncomfortably warm; and Levison & Co., though very polite, could not help betraying slight signs of restiveness. The Terrible Three were the first to take their leave.

"Thank you fellows awfully!" said Tom Merry. "Never enjoyed a supper so much in my life!" "What-ho!" said Manners. "We'll clear now. Thanks, no end!"

Monty Lowther unlocked the door. He pulled the handle, but the door did not open.

"Something wrong with this lock," said Lowther. "Get back from the door, you chaps—any ass got his hoof against it?

"It's jammed!"
"Somebody holding it outside, perhaps!" said Blake.

"Trimble!" roared Tom Merry. "Are you there, you fat duffer? Let go the door at once, you chump!"
"Let go!" roared Lowther.
"He, he! I'm not holding the door!" chuckled Trimble.
"It's screwed up!"
"What?"

" What?"

- "You wouldn't let me tell you that Figgins came along," id Trimble, with great enjoyment. "I spotted him, and said Trimble, with great enjoyment. "I spotted him, and I'd have warned you. He, he he! Thought I was after your measly supper, didn't you? He, he I asy, you'll never get out of that study. Figgy's driven in three gimlets—""Oh. mv hat!"
- "And broken off the handles!" continued Baggy Trimble cheerfully. "They'll never be got out!"

  "Gammon!" howled Blake. "Where would Figgins get a lot of gimlets from?"

  "Ho

"He got them out of your tool-chest in No. 6."

"And you let him!" roared Tom Merry.
"He, he, he! You wouldn't let me tell you-"He, he, he! You fat villain-

"You tat villain"He, he, he!"
Baggy Trimble seemed very much amused.
"He, he, he!"
"Cut off and get somebody to open the door, Trimble!"
"Catch me!" chuckled Trimble. "Perhaps you'll ask a chap to a feed another time! He, he he!"

And Baggy Trimble rolled away, chortling. And in Study No. 9 fifteen fellows looked at one another, with feelings that could scarcely have been expressed in words.

CHAPTER 8. Shut In !

A pebble rattled on the window-pane.

A pebble rattled on the window-pane.

Ernest Levison stepped to the window and looked out into the dusky quad. It was long past dark now, but light from lower windows illuminated a patch of the quadrangle, and in the patch of light, three fellows could be seen, recognisable as Figgins & Co. of the New House.

They looked up at the window of No. 9, and George Figgins here the property of the country of the country of the New House.

heads.

"Hallo, up there!" shouted Figgins.
"You cheeky rotter!" bawled Levison.
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Who's cook-house of St. Jim's?" yelled Figgins.
"We are!" chortled Kerr and Fatty Wynn. "We are-we

"We are!" chortled Kerr and Fatty Wynn. "We are—we are—we are—we are—we are—we "Bai Jove! You cheekay wottah, Figgins——"
"Hallo! Is that Gussy? How's Gwendoline of the moated grange, Gussy?"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"THE CEM LIBRARY.—No. 713.

Arthur Augustus jerked his head back quickly from the window. He did not want to hear anything about Gwendoline or the mosted grange.
"Isn't there anythin' to chuck at those cheeky retters?"

muttered Cardew, biting his lip.
"Here's an apple," said Wally of the Third. "It's a bit overrine-

Whiz! The apple came down from the window with a sudden swoop, and it landed on George Figgins' upturned, grinning

To judge by the way it squashed over Figgy's features, that apple certainly was a little overripe.
"Ocoocooch!" spluttered Figgins.
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Figgins & Co. jumped back out of range, Figgins wiping his face frantically with his handkerchief.

his face frantically with his handkerchief.

"Groogh! Horrid rotters!" gasped Figgins.
Whis! Whiz! Crash! Several more missiles came swooping down from the window. But the New House trio were out of range now, and they were careful to keep out of it. Levison slammed the window shut.
No good talking to those New House rotters," he said.
"We've got to get that dashed door open. It's time for Frank to turn up for prep with Mr. Selby, nearly," There'll be a row if we're late for prep," said Wally of the Third. "I say, you fellows must be awful asses to let Figgins dish you like this. This kind of thing wouldn't happen in the Third!"

"On, dry up!" grunted Herries,
"I guess we've got to get that peaky door open," remarked Kt Wildrake. "We shall be chortled to death over this. Seems to me the New House is licking this House all along Seems to me the New House is licking this House all along the line," the line."

"Yaas, wathah! Powwaps that is because our leadah is a Shell chap!" said Arthur Augustus D'Arcy thoughtfully. "I have thought sevewal times that for weal leadahship the fellows ought to apply at Studay No. 6 in the Fourth."

"Hear, hear!" said Blake, with emphasis.
"Something in that," said Digby. "You're leader, Tom Merry, old infant. Would you mind leading the way out of this giddy study? It's time for prep, you know."

"Yaas, wathah!"

Tom Merry grunted, and tried the door. But the door refused to budge. Three gimlets had been driven to the hilt, piercing the door and the post, and the door was hermetically sealed. George Figgins had done his work efficiently. "We're waiting for you, Tommy!" remarked Blake. "Go ahead, old chap," said Manners.

"Oh, don't be asses!" said Manners.

"Oh, don't be asses!" said Tom warmly. "How can I get the thumping door open when it's fastened outside?"

"Who's leader?" inquired Blake blandly.

"Who's leader!" inquired diake diamely.
"Oh, rats!"
"Weally, Tom Mewwy—"
"Better how! for help," suggested Cardew. "Must, sooner

Tom Merry thumped on the door. There were footstepe and voices in the passage outside, and a sound of chuckling. Baggy Trimble had probably spread the news of Figgins "Open this door, you fellows!" shouted Tom.

"Hallo! Why can't you open it?" came the voice of Kangaroo of the Shell. It's screwed up

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Don't cackle, you ass—help us out!"
"He, he, he!" came Trimble's fat chortle. "There's three gimlets, with the heads broken off—he, he, he! You'll never get them out,"
"My hat! You fellows seem to be in a fix!" Talbot of the Shell was speaking. "Blessed if I see how these gimlets are to be got at."
"Get a crowbar, or something," said Tom Merry desserately.

desperately.

"Dear me!" It was Skimpole's voice this time. "Let me look, you fellows. There is no problem that cannot be solved by a sufficiently concentrated application of the higher mental powers."

Ha, ha, ha!"

Skimpole of the Shell blinked at the fastened door through his big glasses. The genius of the School House corrugated his ample brow in a frown of deep thought.

Well?" said Talbot.

"The matter is quite simple, my dear fellow," said Skim-ole, blinking at him. "The opening of this door is perfectly pole, blinking at him.

"That's good news," came Tom Merry's voice from within.
"How are you going to do it, Skimmy?"

"It is as

"My dear fellow," said the scientific Skimmy. simple as Euclid, and as clear as Einstein. The door is secured by three gimlets, which hold it with a certain force which we will call X. To overcome this force we require a greater force. to be applied to it, which we will call Y. Upon the application of Y to X the door opens at once.'
"Oh, my hat!"

"As you see, my dear Merry, the problem is easily solved.
That shows the value of a scientific training of the mind—"
"But where are you going to get Y to apply to X!" howled Skimpole shook his head.

"That is quite a different matter, my dear Talbot, and does not enter into my purview of the problem," he answered. "However, there are many means and methods. A steamderrick-derrick—"

"Have you got a steam-derrick in your waistcoat pocket?"
stricked the captain of the Shell.
"Nunno! The bulk of a steam-derrick, my dear Merry, precludes the possibility of conveying it within the circumscribed space of a waistcoat pocket—"
"Kill him, somebody!" gasped Tom Merry. "If it wasn't for this dashed door, Skimmy, I'd bang your head on the wall—""

wall—" and on the "My dear Merry—"
"For goodness' sake get that door open somehow!" howled Wally of the Third. "Selby will scalp us if we're late for prep!"
"A besteen-" "A besteen-" "

A battering-ram," said Skimpole thoughtfully. "Although A Dettering Taim, Said Skimpose inougnounty. Attough an old-fashioned contrivance, a battering Taim would undoubtedly exert the superior force, which we have agreed to call Y, and would overcome the resistance of the inferior force, which we call X.—."

"Have you got a battering-ram?" raved Tom Merry.
"No, my dear Merry?" But the absence of the contrivance to which I have made allusion does not alter the fact that—Ow! Wow!"

Ow! Wow!"
Skimpole was bundled away from the door. It was evident that his scientific mind was not of much use in getting the door open. Kangaroo had fetched a big chisel from his study, and a hammer. The sound of hammering rang and echoed along the passage as the Australian junior set to work.

It was not an easy task. And the door was considerably damaged. But Kangaroo was successful, and the door of Anaged. But Kangaroo was successful, and the door of Study No. 9 opened at last.

Wally & Co. scuttled out, and ran hard for the Third Formorom. The other guests departed in a more leisurely manner. They scattered to their various studies for prep. In Study No. 10, in the Shell, the Terrible Three were still at prep when Jack Blake looked in.

"We've been dished all along the line by the New House," said Blake. "We've got to down them, or they'll crow us to death. You call yourself some sort of a leader, Tom Merry. I've just looked in to warn you that if you don't get a move on, you'll be sacked before long!"

"Heard anything more of Gwendo-line?" asked Tom Merry affably, and Manners and Lowther chuckled.

"Had any more feeds bagged in your study?" queried Lowther. "You see," said Manners, "we can keep our end up against the New House all right; only Study No. 6 lets us down."

down. "That's the trouble!" assented Tom Merry. Blake snorted.

"I tell you "Cut it out!" he said. that the New House is scoring eyer us, and if you don't down them, Tommy, you'll get the chopper, and we'll elect a new leader. That's flat!"

And Jack Blake departed, and slammed the door after him by way of emphasis.

Tom Merry shrugged his shoulders, and continued his work. But Manners and Lowther exchanged glances. In the presence of the Fourth-Former, they backed up their chief loyally. In their private circle, they reserved the right to call him over the coals.

"Cheeky sweep!" said Lowther.
"But there's something in it, all the same, Tommy. You'll have to wake up.

. "Just what I was going to remark," assented Manners. "You really must sit up and take notice, Tommy, and get a move on somebow.

"Rats!" was Tom Merry's reply.

"But look here, you ass -

"Look here, you chump-"Bow-wow!" said Tom.

And Manners and Lowther grunted, and gave their attention to prep.

CHAPTER 9.

On the War-Path. OTS of time for some footer-

But the carrier-"The carrier won't be here till half-past three," said Figgins

"But—" said Fatty Wynn.
"Don't you worry, Fatty! The hamper will be all right."
"But—" said Kerr.

"Anyhow, the carrier will leave it with Taggles, and we can fetch it across to the New House. Let's go and get some footer practice. tooter practice.

Tom Merry sat up, and looked out of the open window of the hobby club-room in the School House. Tom was alone in the club-room; he had retired to that quiet spot to finish an article for the "St. Jim's News." He had been thinking an article for the "St. Jim's News." He had been thinking of anything but the New House fellows, when Figgins & Co.

strolled past the window, chatting as they passed.

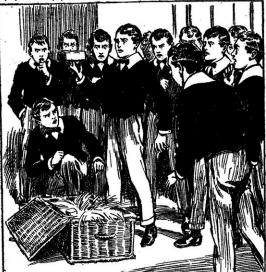

Tom Merry laid down his fountain-pen, and looked from Tom Merry laid down his vontain-pen, and looked from the window. Figgins, Kerr, and Wynn, were walking in the direction of the football-ground. It was Saturday afternoon; a half-holiday at St. Jim's. Tom Merry was due on the football-ground shortly; but he was glad now that he had sat by the club-room window to finish his article. Quite by chance, he had learned something to his advantage.

The recent defeats sustained at the hands of the New House fellows, had not been forgotten in the School House. Tom had received hints on all sides that it was time for him to get a move on, if the New House wasn't to justify its claim to be called cock-house of St. Jim's.

Now chance, as it were, had delivered the enemy into his hands! Tom Merry left his article for the "News" unfinished, and strolled out of the club-room

"Hallo, here you are!" greeted Lowther, as he joined his chums in the quad. "What about footer?" "Time we turned up," said Manners. Tom Merry shook his head.

"Footer We're on the war-path at present," he said.

Tom Merry removed a thick layer of ancient straw packing from the hamper. What was revealed underneath was not an array of delicacies. The first object that came clearly into view was a large brick! Tom Merry lifted it out blenkly. "What on earth's that?" ejaculated Blake. "A—a—a—a brick!" "Great Societ!"

can stand over for a bit. We're going House a taste of the kybosh this afternoon We're going to give the New

"Getting a move on at last, old man?" asked Lowther.
"I shall want Study No. 6 to help," said Tom calmly.
"Let's look for those Fourth Form bounders."

Blake & Co. were soon found. They were thinking of foot-ball, too; but they were more than ready to back up their leader in any alarums or excursions against the rival House.

"Count on us," said Blake generously. "We're going to give you a chance, Tommy. The New House bounders have got to be put in their place. They're got to be made to sing small. If you can do it, go ahead."

"Yaas, wathah!" said Arthur Augustus D'Arcy, with a nod. "We'll back you up, deah boy. I feah, howevah, that Figgins & Co. are wathah too much for you."

"They won't get me to amble to the coppice to meet Gwendoline, anyhow," retorted Tom Merry.

"Weally, you know..."

"Weally, you know-"
"Well, what's the game?" asked Herries. "Give it a

"Figgins is expecting a hamper this afternoon, by the

"How do you know?"
"Never mind how I know," said Tom Merry calmly.
"Privates are never let into secrets by a good general—"

"Why, you cheeky ass

"Just take my word for it, that those New House bounders where my work for it, that knose New House bounders are getting a hamper this afternoon," said Tom. "It's going to be left with the porter about half-past three. Figgy's gone to the footer, and he's going to call at Taggles' lodge for the hamper, after the carrier's been. We're going to bag that "Hear, hear!" "Now, just listen to the plan of campaign," said Tom.

"We three will bag the hamper from Taggles' lodge when it comes. You four will have to keep Figgins & Co. off the "Keep an eye on them on the footer-ground," said Tom.

"It they keep at the footer, all serene; if they come off the ground, you chaps drop on them, and sit on them, or slaughter them—anything you like, in fact, so long as they don't come rooting round Taggles' lodge after their hamper. See?"

obting round rasses. "Yaas, watshah!"
"We'll get the hamper into the hobby club-room," conuned Tom. "We'll ask some of the fellows to a spread in tinued Tom. "We'll ask some of the fellows to a spread that room. Figgins has good hampers, sometimes, and we'll have the lot in a good spread. The number of the guests blow the lot in a good spread. The number of the guests will depend on the size of the hamper. But we must have Study No. 9, anyhow; they deserve it, after the way we cleaned them out the other day."

cleaned them out the other day."
"Good!" assented Blake.
"But that isn't all," went on Tom. "As soon as we've got the hamper safe in our quarters, and the company have strived, we'll let Figgy know we've got it, and he can come and look on at the feed, if he likes, through the hobby clubroom window. See? 'Rather a beano to scoff Figgy's tuck, with Figgy glowering at us through the window!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Bai Jove! What a wippin' ideah!" exclaimed Arthur Augustus heartily. "You are not always such a feahful ass as you look, old chap!"
"Fathead!"

"Weally, Tom Mewwy-"
"Mind you don't let Figgin & Co. get away, if they show signs of coming after the hamper," added Tom.
"Rely on us!" said Blake.

And the two parties separated; the Terrible Three sauntering down to the gates to wait there for the carrier, and Blake & Co. proceeding to Little Side, to keep an eye on the New House trio.

Figgins & Co. were actively punting a ball with a crowd of New House fellows, and they did not even look at Study No. 6. When the half-hour chimed out, Figgins & Co. were No. 0. Whee the half-hour chimed out, Figgins & Co. were still busy; and Blake exchanged a glance of satisfaction with its chums. Appently, Figgy had forgotten the hamper, in the chums. Appently, Figgy had forgotten the hamper, in grant of the state of the game or else he supposed that it was quite safe when delivered at the porter's lodge. Meanwhile, the Terrible Three of the Shell were watching the road keenly and anxiously for Cripps, the carrier. And they smiled with satisfaction when that gentleman arrived, and a large and heavy hamper was handed over to the care of Taggles, the porter. Cripps' cart rumbled on its way, and the hamper was left standing by the lodge porch. It was a heavy weight, and Taggles did not take it inside; and he did not mean to convey it to its destination, either, unless Figgins shelled out a tip worthy of the occasion. But as it happened, Taggles was to be saved that trouble, anyhow. "Couldn't have happened better, you fellows," murmured The Gem Library.—No. 713.

Tom Merry. "It looks thumping heavy; but we three can handle it."

"Yes, rather!"
"Rather a surprise for Figgy, when he comes for it!" chuckled Lowther.

The Terrible Three cautiously approached the hamper, and lifted it. They were sturdy youths; but the weight of that lifted it. They were sturdy youths; but the weignt of that big hamper taxed their strength. They grunted and gasped a good deal as they bore it away. Kangaroo of the Shell met them on the way, and lent a hand. The hobby clubroom in the School House had a side door on the quad, and it was to that door that the raiders were conveying their prize. They gasped as they landed it there.

"All serene!" said Tom Merry breathlessly.

Louther clanged round.

Lowther glanced round.

Lowther glanced round.

"No sign of those New House rotters," he said. "My hat! We've fairly done them in the eye this time."

The hamper was landed in the hobby club-room, and the door on the quad locked. The School House fellows did not mean to run any risk of a raid from the New House.

"Now cut off and tell Blake, Monty," said from Merry.

"You go and fetch Levison & Co., Manners, and ask two or three other fellows. Judging by its weight, there's enough in that hamper to feed a crowd."

'Right-ho!

"And give Figgy the tip!" chuckled Tom Merry.
"Ha, ha, ha!"
Monty Lowther ran over to the football ground. Blake

& Co. greeted him eagerly.

"All right?" asked Blake.

"Right as rain."

In great glee, Blake & Co. hurried off to the School ouse. Monty Lowther crossed over towards the New House footballers.

"Figgins!" he shouted.
"Hallo!" said George Figgins, looking round.

"Do you mind us borrowing your hamper?"

"If you want to see a feed, you can stroll along to the hobby club window," said Lowther affably. "Sorry we can't ask you to the feed—dogs and New House fellows not admitted, you know. But you can look on if you like." "You've got my hamper?" roared Figgins.

"Just a few!" "tarted Polfers"

"Collar him!" shouted Redfern.
Monty Lowther cut off at top speed and arrived breathess at the School House. Figgins looked at Kerr and Vynn. The three chortled.

ress at the School House. Figgins looked at Kerr and Wynn. The three chortled.

"Looks like a catch!" said Figgins.

"It do-it does!" chuckled Kerr.

"Let's go and watch," said Fatty Wynn, his plump face beaming. "Id like to see the dear little ones enjoying their dear little selves."

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"His, ha, ha!" Quite a little army of New House fellows followed Figgins & Co. from the football ground to the School House. And to judge by their grinning faces, Figgins & Co. did not feel the loss of their hamper very keenly, which was really rather surprising.

CHAPTER 10. A Very Valuable Prize.

"B AI Jove! What a whoppah!"

"Ball Jove! what a wnoppear."

"Good egg!"
A crowd of School House fellows gathered round the big hamper in the hobby club-room, with exclamations of surprise and satisfaction. There was no doubt that it was an unusually large and weighty hamper, and if it was filled with tuck, the School House heroes had undoubtedly a remandious capture from the enemy. The news filled with tuck, the School House heroes had undountedly made a fremendous capture from the enemy. The news spread fast enough; Levison and Clive and Cardew arrived, and Gore and Glyn, and Julian and his chums, and halfadozen other fellows, including Baggy Trimble. Even Trimble was not to be denied on an occasion like this—judging by the weight of the hamper, there was plenty even for Trimble

Trimble.

"Good old Tommy!" said Manners. "We've done them this time, and no mistake. It's addressed to Figgins—good old Figgins! I'm sure Figgy won't mind handing it over to pals like us."

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"By gad, it's fastened up pretty safely," said Cardew. "Wire as well as cord. Anybody got any wire-cutters?"
"They made sure of it," said Tom Merry complacently "But not quite so sure as we did."
"Yasa, wathah!"
The hamper was certainly fastened very securely; but many hands made light work, and the School House crowd got the fastenings open. By that time several faces were peering in at the hobby club-room. That window had been left open, but there was no chance of a raid from the New House juniors outside. The sill was nearly on a level with Figgins' chin as he looked in, and there were plenty of defenders if an attack had been attempted. But Figgins & Co. did not seem to be thinking of an attack. "So you bagged that hamper?" exclaimed Figgins. "Hallo, there's Figgy! Like to come in, Figgy?" asked Blake affably. "Just jump in, old top, do! You'll go out again so fast that it will make your head swim." "Yaas, wathah!" chuckled Arthur Augustus. "Oh, I'm not coming in," said Figgins. "Only just called to ask whether Gussy's heard anything lately from Gwendoline?" "Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Weally, Figgins, you wottah—"
"Get that lid open," said Tom Merry. "Sorry, Figgins, old chap—but all's fair in war, you know. This is our harmer." hamper.

Figgins shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh, we're not grousing," he said. "We're cock-house of St. Jim's, anyhow, and you're welcome to that hamper."

"Wats, deah boy!" said Arthur Augustus. Blake chuckled.

Well, it's ours!" he said. "Turn out the stuff, you ows. You can look on and admire, Figgy."

"Well, it's ours;
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Ha id of the big hamper was open at last, and several hands jerked out the straw packing inside.
A dozen pairs of eyes looked eagerly into the hamper, in the expectation of beholding a large assortment of delicacies. Baggy Trimble's mouth was fairly watering.
"Why—what?" ejaculated Tom Merry.

He removed a thick layer of ancient straw packing, which looked as if it had seen service several times. What was looked as if the description of the straw of delicacies. The He removed a thick layer of ancient straw packing, while looked as if it had seen service several times. What we revealed underneath was not an array of delicacies. The first object that came desarty into view was a large brick!

Tom Merry lifted it out blankly.

"Wha-at on earth's that?" ejaculated Blake.

"Great Scott!"

"Great Scott!"

Lowther clutched another object out—it was a half-brick this time! Manners was the next to fish out an article, and the article was an ancient tin kettle that had evidently been gathered from a dust-heap.

By this time there was consternation.

More and more ancient and mouldy straw packing was turned out, and along with it a fine assortment of bricks, half-bricks, stones, and chunks of wood and bark. There was still a thick layer of stones in the bottom of the big hamper when the School House juniors gave it up. They

GRAND Value-for-Money STORY BOOKS!

BOYS' FRIEND LIBRARY 4d. each.

NO. 575.—THE LUCK OF THE CUP.
A grand yare for foods By W. E. GROVES.
NO. 576.—THE FRUD IN WHEN HOUSE.
NO. 576.—THE SWOAD OF THE TEMPLES.
A fine story of the great relettion By SEMUND BARTON.
NO. 578.—OHAMPION OF THE CUE.
A splendt billings yare. By A. S. HAEDY,
NO. 579.—THE CIRCLE OF THERTEEN.
A CHING decelies not of the property o

SEXTON BLAKE LIBRARY 4d. each.

NO. 103.—THE SACRED CITY.
A wooderful story of detective work in London and Benares, introducing Granite Grant and Mile. Julie.
No. 194.—MARGONED.
and M. Julies Vedette.
No. 195.—STATES STOREURS.

A magniferat Description aftender.

A magniferat romate of detective aftender.

Mo. 196-- THE MISSPERING VOICE.

A stirring story of a bank crash.

Mo. 197-- THE YELLOW FACE.

A story of facinating Chinese mystery.

NUGGET LIBRARY 3d. each.

Now on Sale. Buy your Copies TO-DAY!

turned ferocious glares upon the grinning faces in the

You spoofing rotters!" roared Blake.

"Bai Jove!

"Bat Jove!"
"Oh dear!" groaned Baggy Trimble. Baggy had a keen appetite that was equal to most things; but it was not equal to bricks and half-bricks. Even Baggy drew a line there.

"Ha, ha, ha!" yelled Figgins. "Tuck in, dear boys; tuck in and enjoy yourselves. You've bagged our hamper, you know."

"Ha, ha, ha!"
The New House crowd roared. Tom Merry & Co. gazed at one another with sickly glances.

That magnificent hamper had evidently been prepared by Figgins & Co.—prepared for the express purpose of being raided by the heroes of the School House. And it occurred to Tom—rather late—that that careless talk he had overheard among Figgins & Co., at the club-room window, had not been quite so careless as he had supposed. It was not been quite so careless as he had supposed. It was evident now that the astute Figgins had seen him sitting there, and had strolled in that direction, and talked in his hearing, for the special purpose of pulling his leg.

Tom Merry realised that, now! The realisation came a little too late to be of service, however.

"Go it!" chortled Figgins. "Tuck in! Take care you don't get indigestion, old tops! But tuck in, and welcome!"
"Ha ha ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

Figgins & Co. walked off, the New House crowd roaring with laughter.

Tom Merry looked at the hamper and at the wrathful and dismayed faces of the numerous juniors that had gathered to the spread. That spread evidently, was not coming off now.
"Oh, my hat!" said Tom, at last.

"Bai Jove!" Athur Augustus D'Arcy looked round.
"Bai Jove!" Athur Augustus D'Arcy looked round.
"Bai Jove!" I thus got a new leadah. I don't want to say anythin' zgainst Tom Mewwy, of course; but I think evewy gentleman pwesent will admit that he is a howlin' ass, and a fwabjows dummy."

dummy."

"And a silly owl!" roared Blake,

"Of all the fatheads—"
"Of all the chumps—"
"Of all the chumps—"
"Of all the chumps—"
"Yans, wathah! I weally considah—"
"Thanks, awfully, old bean," said Cardew satirically,
"We won't stay for the feed, Your tuck looks a little too hefty for me. But thanks no end,"

"And Caydew stolled and expination." The act of the said

And Cardew strolled out, grinning. The rest of the party followed, and every fellow, as he went, had a remark to make to Tom Merry, and not one of the remarks was of a complimentary nature. Tom's face was crimson when he was left alone with his chums.

We-we shall have to clear all that rubbish, away!" said

Tom feebly. "You can do that, old chap," said Lowther. "Perhaps it will be a lesson to you. I wouldn't say anything while the other fellows were here, but of all the crass idiots—" "Exactly," said Manners. "I wouldn't say it before the others, but of all the frabjous, burbling dummies—" "Look here—"

Look here "Oh, rats!"

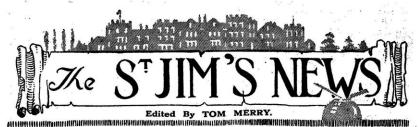

Manners and Lowther departed, and Tom Mcrry was left alone with his prize. And that evening there was animated discussion in a dozen junior studies in the School House, and the subject of the discussion was Tom Merry, and the dismal failure of that hapless youth as a leader against the rival house. But the turn in the tide was coming!

THE END.

Get Next Wednesday's

and read another of these splendid stories dealing with the great battle between the School House and New House. Will Tom Merry lead his chums to victory? That is the important question of the hour at St. Jim's. George Figgins & Co. are determined to be top dogs—can they hold the fort against the onslaught of Tom Merry & Co.?

DON'T MISS NEXT WEEK'S GRAND STORY.

D'ARCY WHEN CAME TO ST. JIM'S.

(Continued from last week.)

By COUSIN ETHEL.

ARTHUR AUGUSTUS D'ARCY, the new boy, walked into the quadrangle with his top-hat in his hand, was surrounded by Figgins & Co., of the New House Fourth, who politely addressed him as Aubrey, and asked whether there were any more like himself at home.

"My name is not Aubrey!" said Gussy stiffly. "And I considah your questions very boyon, you potty juggins! Gimme that topper!" Arthur prometive and the control of the control topper!"

Arthur promptly put his hand behind him, and tried to look defiant. But Fliggy wasn't in the least impressed by his looks; he jerked away the hat and looked at it critically. Deciding that it might look a trille better if it were brushed, he requested had the highest work him. Arthur did can be a trille better him to the least had the him to have a trille were well be a trille weight with the work was the him. Arthur did can be a trille weight was performed to he a trille weighted as he nerformed to nap up the wrong way. Figgins appeared to be a trifle agitated as he performed the operation, and the hat slipped from his hands. In recovering it, his heel accidentally went through the top, and at last in returning it to Arthur Augustus, he clutched so tightly that the brim came away in Gussy's grap, and the rest renained in Figgins."

"You potty coon." said George. "You've quite spoiled a decent like. Permit me to return it, your highness." And, so saying, he ammed it lightly down over the new boy's lammed it lightly down over the new boy's

"BOSHING" A PREFECT.

"BOSHING" A PREFECT,
Later on he knocked across Mellish again,
and that obliging youth said;
"Getting near bed-time, my lord! Would you like me to conduct you to your room?"
Arthur decided that he would, and Mellish turned on his heel and left the House. He pulled up at length outside the study of James Garston Monetith, the head prefect in the New House. He knew gentle James was in the gym, and would not return to left. D'Arcy with rigid instructions that if anybody dared to come into the room, he was not to stand on ecremony, but to slosh them down with a pillow until they "got out of it."

"Wight-ho, deah boy!" said Arthur ugustus, "I will wemembah. You may go Augustus now, young fellah-my-lad!"

"Pleasant dreams!" answ answered Percy

But if Arthur really did have any pleasant dreams, he had a decidedty unpleasant awakening when Monteith found him in his own room.

James and his pal Sleath came into the study together, for the purpose of enjoying a quiet smoke and a talk before retiring for the night.

They were just in the middle of a chuckle over a recent triumph when a loud noise sounded throughout the room.

Solinear throughout the room.

S.s.-s.n.snore-ret!

The two seniors were on their feet in a second. Sleath suggesting that there was a lag hidden in the room watching them!

fag hidden in the room watching them!
"By Mosses!" cried Monteith. "If there is, we'll slay him alive!"
Then, by pulling the screen on one side, they both bepletd Arthur Augustus slumbering peacefully on the senior; bed.
Monteith deedded that it was quite an unTHE GEM LIBRANY.—NO. 713.

necessary procedure to awaken the swell of St. Jim's before commencing to "lay into Min" with his stoutest cane. He just got on with the business there and then. D'Arry quickly awoke as he celt the lashes D'Arry quickly awoke as he celt the state of th against the study table. This went over with a crash, hurling books and papers and inkpot far and wide.

Then Mr. Ratcliff, the Housemaster, appeared on the scene, having been attracted by the noise. He requested Monteith to give an explanation.

an explanation.

"I found him asleep in my bed!" howled Monteith. "When I lugged him out, he buzzed a pillow at me! He's a School House kid, and he's done it for cheek!"
When Arthur had dressed himself, he was taken across to Mr. Kidd. As no explanation was forthcoming from Gussy, Mr. Kidd made it plain that D'Arcy would be severely be to be a seen to be accepted a severe canig.

When it became known that Arthur had withstood hardship for the sake of another, it was generally decided that the swell wasn't such a bad sort after all, and when he thoroughly knew the ropes, he would be quite all right.

Next week I will tell of another experience which befell my cousin while he was still trying to find his feet in this historic school. COUSIN ETHEL.

The Affair of the Boarding-House.

BURGLAR'S CLEVER SCHEME.

F late the newspapers have been of full of amazing exploits on the part of burglars and impostors, but the Ratcliff takes the Banbury. It is common knowledge that Mr. Ratcliff with his revered aister spent a portion of the well-earned holiday at Shrimpton, a rising watering-place. Put in a nutshelt, the astounding adventure the elegant hotel a gentleman who showed extreme interest in scholastic mattern, and this stranger seems to have pumped Mr. Ratcliff as to the historic foundation of St. Jim's, and his-Mr. Ratcliff s-position at the school.

Events succeeded one another with school. Events succeeded one another with rapidity. Both Mr. Rateliff and his sister were charmed, and small wonder, with the versatility of their new friend, and accompanied blood, including a picnic to an old castle which has been partially restored. The stranger led Mr. Rateliff and his sister into the old keep, and locked them in. That is where the story of Mr. Rateliff ends—not to start again until a couple of days later, when a guide discovered them and set them when a guide discovered when the free.

Meantime, there had arrived at St. Jim's a geatleman the very image of the popular as geatleman the very image of the popular asspected anything, not even ha whiteen until the night when he vanished with pretty well everything of value out of the Head's study, and a representative collection of silver trophies.

Alas! the holiday season has many of these sad endings. Soon after, the genuine and only Mr. Ratcliff put in an appearance, and later investigations showed how successfully he had been duped, and how greatly St. Jim's was the locer by the clever trick. So far, the police have not laid their hands on the smart imposior, who faded into thin air along with his swag.

Latest Football Results.

MATCHES PLAYED LAST SATURDAY.

By HARRY NOBLE. (Special Football Correspondent.)

Great Day for St. Jim's—Grand Triumph for the Middles—Highcliffe Seniors Outplayed— Shell Second Elevan Surprise—Bolosver's Bashers Slaughter Highcliffe—Rookwood Shell Wiped Up—St. Jim's Fifth Whack Greyfriars —Middle School Hollow.

(NOTE.—By special arrangement, the results of football matches played at the following colleges throughout the season will appear exclusively in the "St. Jim's News.")

The results of all matches played by public schools in the Southern Counties will be recorded week by week in the "St. Jim's News." A league table will appear shortly. Look out for it!

SENIOR ELEVENS. Greyfriars v. St. Judes ... H.M.S. Thundercloud X Herald") v. Bagshot ... Redcliffe v. Highcliffe ... XI. ("Boys' Rylcombe v. Abbotsford ...

JUNIOR ELEVENS. St. Jim's v. Greyfriars ... Highcliffe v. Bagshot ... Redcliffe v. Rookwood ... ... Rylcombe v. St Judes ... Courtfield v. Abbotsford ... INTER-HOUSE MATCHES.

INTER-HOUSE MATCHES.
Rookwood Shell (Smythe & Co.) v.
St. Jim's Shell Second XI. ... ...
Bolsover's Bashers (Greyfriars) v.
Higheliffe Select (Pon & Co.) ...
St. Jim's Fifth v. Greyfriars Middle School XI. ... ... ... ...
Rookwood Kifth ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ...
Rookwood Fifth ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ...

13 12

Notes on Matches-Next week I will give the names of the grounds on which the natches are played. Also the names of the goal-scorers, and a short report on each game. Don't on any account miss it. Space only permits me to make remarks about the following: Bolsover's Bashers were obviously out for trouble when they came on to the field. Pon & Co. looked equally evil. The game which followed could scarcely be described as football, for B. Br.a. inflicted eight zerfous causalties, and received at. Second team, captained by Givn, a weird and wonderful game took place. Two of Smythe's players were ordered off the field, and four others deserted the game of their own accord. Notes on Matches.-Next week I will give

The Queer Case of Dr. Brutell

Written By Professor Hector Gordon, Science Master of St. Jim's.

STRANGE PERSONALITY.
R. RICHARD BRUTELL, great scientist and inventor, was one of the most respected citizens of the little most respected citzens of the facts generous almost to a fault towards the poorer inhabitants of the district, and everyone loved him for his kind and gentle nature. But these trusting citizens were unactualitied with the other side of the doctors.

maracter.

Brutell was, in fact, the victim of a strange malady which completely destroyed the balance of his nature. When these dread spells came on him le was a different man entirely, both in mind, and body, the man with deep sympathies there stood a veritable brute—a demon.

Dr. Brutell, when in his normal state, had accomplished big things, and the great honour and triumph of having discovered the secret of the disable brutell was able to pass through doors, walls, and other solid bodies.

pass through doors, walls, and other some of the double X-ray also enabled the doctor to become invisible at will, and to overcome the force of gravity. Unfortunately, however, the power to combat these various forces of Nature was an extremely dangerous weapon in the hands of such a remarkable personality as much reference to the property of the evil influence he was still able to retain knowledge and control of these powers. Strangely enough, when in his normal state the doctor remembered nothing of what happened during his periods of madness. On the other hand, when under the spell of evil when in his right mind. But Dr. Brutell was when in his right mind. But Dr. Brutell was when he was the victim of some extraordinary influence.

wheth me.

In the quietude of his study he often sat and puzzled over this extraordinary mystery, and after a great deal of work he was successful in making a mixture, by the aid of which he was subject to the coming of his weeked persons, to arrest the coming of his weeked persons, to arrest the coming of his weeked prevent man were usually caused by nervous shocks, sudden storm, unsettled conditions in the weather, and similar circumstances. In his normal self Dr. Brutell was a lover of Nature. He was waiking to-day about the beauty of the flowers attracted his attention and Richard Brutell beat down to make a spacious grounds adjoining his house. The beauty of the flowers attracted his attention, and Richard Brutell bent down to make a closer study of one of the plants, steed upon the object of his admiration, that he failed notice that dark, black clouds were quickly gathering in the say. He had consuited his harometer before leaving the autied his harometer before leaving the failed to disclose any unsettled condition of the weather. Had there been even a slight indication, he would not have ventured out just then. Suddenly in the distance there was an ominous rumbling in the strength of the weather. Had there been even a slight indication, he would not have ventured out just then. Suddenly in the distance there was an ominous rumbling in the strength of the sumble of the sumble

A curious fear obsessed the unfortunate man as he hastened towards the door of his home. Why he should feel this way he did not know. Brutell almost felt inclined to man as he hasteden towarus are over the mone. Why he should feel this way he did home. Why he should red this way he did home. Why he had been as a supreme effort to overcome what he monifored his own cowarder. The next moment, however, and the money of the money o again. Something spurred him forward with ever increasing speed.

At last he had reached the open door of his house, and he made for the stairs leading to his study. Again that sickening feeling of houror overcame Dr. Brutell. He knew that something he had been something the study of the study of the house of the study door, but he was only partly conscious of this fact. As though in a dream he turned the handle of the door and entered, had previously placed the flask containing the powerful hay had stretched forward to grasp it, but—it was too late!

The kind symmathetic face of Dr. Brutell

The kind, sympathetic face of Dr. Brutell changed instantly. His pleasant smile had vanished, and in its place there was an evil wicked leer. His personality had also altered. He was a different man entirely, and one whose sole desire was to engage in

THE BLACK CIRCLE.

THE BLACK CIRCLE.

B. REVIELL, the leader of the band of villains known far and wide as the Black Circle, took his seat on the dais at the top of the spacious room which served as the headquarters of the gang. On either side of him sat Hammer and Finchers, his expension of the villainous crowd. Each member of the Black Circle wore a black gown and a hood which completely covered the head. The sinister crowd turned towards their leader, and watted for him to open the priceedings. The gang had the control of the world of the control of the most important banks in the district.

in the district.

Brutell himself was the man detailed to do the most important work in connection with their leader, who undoubtedly possessed great courage and resource, would be able to carry it off successfully. The members of the gang admired "the doctor" as they referred to himself powers which he pos-to carry it off successfully. The members of the gang admired "the doctor" as they referred to him.

The extraordinary powers which he posterior that the posterior of the control of the posterior of the control of th

Gordon, Science Master of St. Jim's. The grille satisfactorily fulfilled its object of keeping the general public on the "wrong side" of the proney, and all transactions were supported by the property of the proney, and all transactions were the opening in a booking-office at a station. Banks situated in a wild western district of this sort, could not afford to take any risks, for there were men who took desperate measures to secure what they coveded. The measures to secure what they coveded. The difficulties to the extraordinary Dr. Brutell, the glanced at it for a moment. There was a flash and a roar which seemed to stupely the amazed cashier standing near, and the next instant Dr. Brutell, assisted by his trong iron barrier. It did not take the mad doctor long to overpower the cashier, who made a feeble attempt to obstruct him and prevent him carrying out his aim. Then, gathering up away with his rich haul.

Brutell, however, was not aware that an alarm had already been given, and that even wa large force of police were preparing to give chase. But he soon learnt this disturbinate. Considering that there was no need for Considering that there was no need for ing fact.

Considering that there was no need for undue haste on his part, Brutell had driven his car along at an easy speed.

his car along at an easy speed.
Great was his alarm when he caught sight of a small fleet of motor-cycle police in the distance. Although he was a fair way in front there was not a minute to be lost.
Brutell speeded the car up, and made for the shortest route possible to the headquarters of the Black Circle. But the police were not to be beaten without a struggle.
Their cycles were able to take short cuts which were impossible for the bigger whilete, hold be the structure of the bigger whilete.
The control of the bigger whilete.

aneir cycles were able to take short cuts which were impossible to the bigger which. And whenever there was a chance the plucky and whenever there was a chance the plucky against it. He got every ounce of speed possible out of the car, and he was carering along at a break-acek speed. Later on the glanced around again, and, to the control of the cont

(See next Wednesday's "GEM" for the amasing exploits of Dr. Brutell.) THE GEM LIBRARY.—No. 713.

Adapted from incidents in the Vitagraph

Personal Correspondence.

BY TOM MERRY.

In my recent editorial I asked you all ten simple questions. Barely had twenty-four hours elapsed than letters by the dozen were pouring in from all over the British Isles. Most of us were quite excited when Isies. Most of us were quite excited when a trifle uneasy since my first issue appeared, but everything was settled in a most satisfactory manner within a minute or so of my bursting open these welcome envelopes. Next week in my editorial I shall probably ask a few more questions, and I only hope those among you why requests will do more than the same and the same an wishers to you not and the wishers to you not share it wishers to you not another than the wishers to you not not you have to the the wisher canbed me from Mr. Editor, and will then deal with as many as space allows: Miss Audrey Duckham (Southport); "A Girl Reader" (Glasgow); M. Harris (Portsmouth); "Bubbles" (Brentford); Irene Pawey (Port Talbot); John Greive (Kirkealdy); James (Gillimtham); May Barrow (Chepton); Jians Richards (Highgate); C. P. Ced. Malay Satae); A Bacombe (Margate); My Chum Beat (Manchester); Norman and Stanley Reed (Clapham Junction); Olive King (Harold Wood); D. B. (Nottingham); Fred Mason (Liverpool); Ethel S. (Sussex); C. F. F. Rickard (Shipley).

Management and Angel Company of the Company of the

MY READERS' OWN CORNER. 2/6 is paid for each paragraph accepted.

MODESTY. Cricketer to girl companion: "Yes, their batting was superb, their bowling splendid, and their fielding A 1." "Oh, but what was the score?" "We won."—

S Robinson, 157, Chanterlands Avenue,

THE MAN WHO

KNEW THE SECRET

Miss A. D. (Southport) thinks Cousin Ethel and Doris Levison contributing to the "Gem" makes a pleasant change. She likes my latest production for better the street production for before long. So you hold Herries as your second best character and also like Wally D'Arcy, because they are both fond of dogs? I am glad to hear you like Miss Cleveland's chats on the old happenings at St. Jim's St. Will give plenty of information about the state of the state o

Like A Soldier Fall." Glad you like the "Boys" Herald."

Dike A Soldier wait." Glind you like toe "Boy's Heral's (Portamouth). It will be a M. Harris (Portamouth). It will be a Mednasday when you first read this, so Is can be a minimum of the second of th

Thanks!

"Bubbles" (Brentford).—You must be quite an old supporter if you have been required and the supporter of you have been removed of Valentine Outram. So Cardew is your "favori," as they say in France: He shows no tendencies whatever or reforming yet, though, of course, the fellow isn't at that terrible stage when a reformation on his part is desired by all. Raiph say his grandfather is quite in good health, and he cought to know of the party when the party will be supply wellowing in funds, would not worry him in the least. I see you also like Ernest and Doris Levison. Space is running short now, so I must request you to wait until next week for the remainder of your questions.

Yours sincerely.

TOM MERRY

(More replies next week.) MOST UNCALLED FOR. An aviator fell from his machine into

THE RIGHT TITLE.

THE "NEWS."

When newspapers first came out (called papers) the publishers used to print at the top of the first page the letters "N. S. E. W.," to show that the information in the paper came from all parts of the world. One day these letters

MUCH HANDIER.

There was a load of bricks on the football-ground, in anticipation of some repairs to the payilion. An aged supporter of the club came up, eyed the bricks fondly for a few minutes, knit his

THE RIGHT TITLE.

The artist was of the impressionist school, and had just given the last tonces in a purple-and-blue cansat tonce in a purple-and-blue cansus of the state of the school of the state of the school of the state of the school of the school parts of the world. One day these letters were printed in a different order by mistake—"N. E. W. S." Afterwards the error, and all the papers used "News" in the new style.—Wilfred A. Jews 115, Harriett Street, Cathays, Cardiff.

prices longly for a few minutes, knit his brows as though in deep thought, and remarked to the secretary, who happened to be standing near: "You should have had 'art bricks. They are much handier for the referee."—E. Kibble, Windrek, Grove Road, Coombe Dingle, nr. Bristol.

WHY WAS SHE THERE?

Mr. Burd, who had started out the other night with his wife to go to the pictures, suddenly remembered that he had left his coal-shed unlocked. He went back, turned the key in the lock, and put the key in his pocket. Our eturning, three hours later, he found a neighbour in a furious state of indignation. "What's the matter?" he asked innocently. "Matter enough!" was the reply. "Do you know that you have locked my wile up in your coal-shed?"—John Tod, Raceview. Broughshane, Co. Antrim, Ireland. WHY WAS SHE THERE?

An aviator tell from his macinie into a river, and was pulled out by a man passing by. "Oh, my preserver—my preserver!" cried the airman. "Stow it, guv'nor!" replied the rescuer. "Don't chaff a chap because he works in a jam factory!"—George H. Randall, 35, Flax-ton Road, Plumstead, S.E.18.

HIS OCCUPATION. "The prisoner recluses to give his occupation, sir," remarked a policeman to the magistrate. "Why don't you say what you are?" asked the magistrate of the man in the dock. "Cos it's superfluous," was the reply. "You're as bad as the police, if you'll 'scuse me saying so. What's the charge? Stealing two chairs and a table. There you are! chairs and a table. There you are! What's plainer? I am a furniture remover."—S. Rowley, 102, High Street, Clapham, S.W.4.

THE GEM LIPPARY .- No. 713.

Look out for ANSWERS' great new autumn serial story. Two million people will read it.

WHAT HAVE YOU AGAINST ME?

(Conclusion.)

O sooner had Tom found the key than he had unlocked the door and hurried along the passage. He was sur-prised at first not to find Bob Peel waiting for him, but concluded that his chum had returned to the dormitory.

Tom had run across the quadrangle, escaping from the school by means of climbing a tall tree and swinging from a branch on to the top of the wall. It had been risky, but Tom did not mind taking risks. He, too, took to the fields—for he, least of all, wanted to be seen on the main road. Any policeman seeing a schoolbe seen on the main road. Any poncernan seeing a school-boy abroad at this hour would promptly have marched him back to school.

Thus it was that master and boy, guilty and innocent, unus it was that master and poy, guilty and innocent, were within a few paces of one another.

Through the fields ran a fast stream, deep and dangerous. But Mr. Mullins, as he walked, forgot that. His only thought was of escape of reaching Rangley town, and entraining there. For the trains ran very late from Rangley Junction.

But presently the sound of rushing water came to the master's ears, and he remembered the stream. He stopped quite still, scared. And then, for the first time, he heard the footsteps behind him.

He turned, and Tom Mace loomed up in the darkness.
"Who-who is that?" called the master.
Tom Mace came closer, and Mr. Mullins caught sight of his face.

"You!" he exclaimed. His face went white, for, though he had freed the lad, he had not expected to be confronted Tom Mace, equally surprised, stood quite still. For he had no knowledge of the master's departure.

"Keep away!" called Mr. Mullins shrilly, as though Tom were about to strike him. "Don't follow me! Keep away!"
This sudden meeting completely upset him. In his nervous condition he appeared to think that Tom Mace knew the whole story—that Mace was, in fact, pursuing him to obtain vegerator.

vengeance.

The master held his arm to shield his face, and took a step back. "Mind!" cried Tom, springing forward. "The stream, Mr. Mullins!

But he was too late. A splash! A shriek! And Mr. Mullins was being carried along by the roaring stream.
"Help, help!" shouted the master. "I can't swim! Help!"

For just one second Tom Mace paused, then, kicking off his shoes, he dived into the stream, and with swift strokes cut through the water to where Mr. Mullins bobbed and splashed helplessly.

And even when Tom had the master in his arms, what a struggle it was!

Mr. Mullins, fearing that this was judgment upon him, strove to pull himself out of the water by pushing Tom Mace under.

"Let me go!" panted Tom. "Don't struggle, or we shall both drown

The icy water closed over his head as the master kicked and struggled

But Mr. Mullins was nearly exhausted. His struggles grew feeble and still more feeble, till at last Tom was able to take the man completely in control. Then, though nearly exhausted himself, Tom pulled the master to where he deemed the shore to be.

deemed the snore to be.

Mr. Mullins lay quite still, almost a deadweight, his head shrown back as though his neck were broken.

Throwing back his hand, Tom clutched a reed by the bank and hauled himself up.

It was lucky for Mr. Mullins that Tom knew something of artificial respiration, or the master would most certainly have died. But Tom's courage and effort was rewarded, for the master opened his eyes. For some minutes after that, however, he lay quite still.

But, when at last he was able to rise to his feet, Tom Mace led him towards the school. All the while the master muttered incoherently. The mental strain he had under-gone since the burglary, combined with the shock of his sudden plunge into the stream, seemed to have rendered him delirious.

With the master hanging heavily on his arm, Tom reached

With the insert and the school and rang the bell.
What an age Potts the porter seemed in answering that summons! And, when at last he did open the gates, he took some time being convinced that Tom and the master were not burglars.

But, convinced at last, he helped Tom across the quadrangle. Together they half-led, half-dragged the master into the school through the door, which still stood open.

" HOBBY."

In next Wednesday's "Gom" the Creat Adventure Serial "THE VALLEY OF SURPRISE" will commence. Above, you see the three herces whose adventures every boy will follow with interest Tell all your chums to look out for this great story.

While Tom stayed by the master, Potts ran off to the Headmaster.

Dr. Mason, alarmed and surprised, came down in his dressing-gown, and Tom Mace gave a hurried description of all that had taken place.

"Good heavens!" cried the headmaster. "You—you went into the stream after Mr. Mullins, Mace, at the risk went into the stream after Mr. Mullins, Mace, at the risk of your own life?"

"Yes, sir," answered Tom.
"That was very brave of you, my lad," said the headmaster. "But this is no time for talking. Run him off at once and get a change of clothing, and report to me afterwards. Meanwhile." he turned to the porter, "help me take Mr. Mullins across to the sanatorium, Potts."
"Yes, sir," said the porter, touching his cap.
And, between them, the delirious master was led across the guadrage.

Half, bewrater the quadrangle, and Bob Half the school had been roused by the noise, and Bob Heel came quickly to his chum's side. Tom told his chum all the news, and, at mention of the key, Bob Feel showed all the news, and, at mention of the key, Bob Feel showed the measure surprise, denying, naturally enough, all knowat the freest surprise, denying, naturally enough, all know-ledge of how the key had been got to Tom.

But there was not time then for further explanations. The masters and prefects drove the juniors back to their dormitories.

tories. The juniors, needless to say, did not sleep. The Fourth-Formers discussed the affair in awed tones and waited for the return of Tom Mace, who, in dry clothes, had gone to interview Dr. Mason.

Tom waited in the headmaster's study patiently. But Dr. Mason was a very long time in returning. The junior stood before the mantle-shelf listening to the solemn ticking of the clock. the clock.

He glanced round the study reflectively and noted the blank space where the stolen picture had been. The empty frame had been taken down, and in its place there was a distinct mark on the wall—a patch brighter than the rest of the paper, which had faded slightly.

Anxiously Tom waited, while he pondered over all that had happened since he had come to Millford. His stay there, though short, had been eventful.

And to think that he must go. Expelled! He did not for a moment dream that the Head would pardon him on account of the rescue he had effected. Expelled! Just when he had become popular—when he had won for himself the honoured position of captain of the Form.

But his thoughts were interrupted by the opening of the study door. Dr. Mason entered.

The headmaster's face was flushed, and he was trembling with excitement.

"Mace!" he exclaimed, "you are here, then? Thank goodness.

goodness."
"Why, yes, sir," answered Tom. "You asked for me."
"Yes, yes," ejaculated Dr. Mason hurriedly. "There has been a great injustice done, Mace." He held out his hand. "My lad, pray accept my apology. Your innocence has been proved."
"My-my innocence!" stammered Tom. "But I don't understand, sir!"
Dr. Mason put his hands on the lad's shoulders.

Dr. Mason put his hands on the lad's shoulders.

"Mace," he said, "that wretched man, Mr. Mullins, has confessed all—..."

confessed all—"exclaimed the bewildered lad. "What has he confessed, sir?"

ne contessed, sir "..."

"Why, that he opened the window for Meadows," explained the headmaster. "The wretched man is nearly off his head. He confessed absolutely everything. Mace, 1 plained the headmaster. The week of the headmaster his head. He confessed absolutely everything. Mace, I stant you to keep secret all that I am telling you."

"I will, sir, of course."
"Then I must tell you that Mr. Mullins was once in principle of the property. The rogue, Meadows know this, and, using that knowledge, threatened the poor man with exposure if he did not leave a window open. Afraid to confess, Mr. Mullins allowed you to be accused. He also slipped a key under your door, so that you should go away, in order to make the case appear blacker against you, hoping also that you might not be traced again."

Traced again."

Tom Mace was momentarily bereft of speech. Not for a moment had he suspected this. He had known that some moment had he suspected this. He had known that someone had left the window open, and he had thought of Lundy and the others—but never of Mr. Mullins.

"It is hard to credit, I know," said Dr. Mason. "But that it is the truth I do not doubt in the least. You have acted bravely to-night, Mace, and I am pleased to know that, theugh you were tempted, you did not fall."

He shook Tom's hand firmly.

"Now you had better go to bed—in your dormitory," he added with a smile. "But do not say anything of this to anyone. Merely say that you have been proved innocent of the charge against you."

And Tom, like one in a dream, returned to the Fourth Form dormitory.

He found the juniors sitting up in bed, waiting to hear what had transpired.

"Cheerio, Tom!" called Bob Peel. "Wherefore that smile?

smile?"
And, considering what the juniors knew, it was strange, indeed, that Tom Mace should be smiling.
"I have been proved innocent," he said simply. "The Head is satisfied that I did not leave the window open!"
"My aunt!" shouted Bob Peel, leaping from his bed. "What news!"

He caught hold of Tom Mace and danced him round and

He caught hold of Tom Mace and danced him round and round the dormitors.

"Let go, Bob," laughed Tom, who was nearly breathless.
"I want to go to bed."

"Tell us all about it, first," called Smythe.
And the others echoed "hear, hear!"
But Tom Mace shook his head.

of the said. "Mr. Mullins is in the said." Mr. Mullins is in the sanatorium. He is very ill, I think."
"But how did the Head discover you were innocent, Tom?" asked Bob Peel insistently. Tom smiled and shruged his shoulders.
"He's satisfied that I'm innocent, and that's all I care about," he said.

And Bob Peel had to let it go at that.

And Bob Peel lad to let it go at that.

"I suppose, after the heroic rescue business, the Head sucked in all the lies you told him," sneered Lundy. Bob Peel turned upon him.

"And if you don't shut up, Lundy, there'll be a thick'ear flying around," he said fiercely. "And I think some of you other silly asses might apologise for believing that Tom let the burglars in."

Smythe and Hill and one or two others acted upon the suggestion, and Tom smilingly accepted their apologise.

"Anyway, I suppose Tom is still the Form captain," said Peel, "Anyone want to challenge that?"

So fierce did Bob look that Lundy and Garnet, who had opened their mouths to speak, remained silent.

Bradshaw smuggled himself under the bedclothes, out of sight, He was not looking for trouble.

Bradshaw smuggled himself under the bedelothes, out of sight. He was not looking for trouble.

Bob Peel, with a grunt of satisfaction, got into bed and cheerily bade his chum "good-night."

That night both Tom and he slept well, for both were happy. Tom Mace's name was cleared, and he was captain of the Form.

Next morning Tom Mace took his place in the Form-room, to find Mr. Brown, the Third Form master, in charge. In the sanatorium, Mr. Mullins was reported to be very ill, but no one was allowed to see him.

Later in the day a detective came to the school, and reported that Meadows had been arrested while attempting to leave the country. Bill Mace had not been concerned in the affair.

the affair.

the affair.

With him, the detective brought the stolen picture. The headmaster had Bill Mace at the school and interviewed him. Frightened by the long sentence Meadows had received, Bill Mace was full of repentance, and gladly accepted a position of gardener to one of the Head's friends. So Tom Mace's Inter and mother moved to Ramgley; near to the school, and Mr. Mace became under-gardener to a Mr. Trevor. The man seemed to have sobered a great deal, and when at last the summer holidays came, Tom and he got on splendidly together.

But part of those holidays Tom spent with his chum Bob Peel, in the small Hampshire village of which Mr. Peel was rector. And they were happy days the two spent together.

was 'rector. And they were happy days the two spent together.

"Well, you'll start the winter term with a clear sheet, Tom," said Peel with a smile.

Tom noded.

"Yes, all the fellows seemed very friendly," he said. "All except Lundy."

"Oh, blow him," said Peel. "He'll always be a snot you'll have no one worth speaking about against you now."

And so Tom found when school restarted.

THE END.

(Next week will see the appearance of a grand new Adventure Serial "THE VALLEY OF SURPRISE." Place an order with your newsagent at once for next week's taste of the "GEM," and become a reader of the opening chapters of "THE VALLEY OF SURPRISE."

Printed and published every Wednesday by the Proprietors, The Amalgamated Press, Manifed, The Pressway House, Segistered for transmission by Canadian Magazine Post. Advertisement uffices Prop. Stockway House, Swartsasko Ske rates: Inited II., per annum; 56. dof or its months. About 36. 105 year annum; 55. do or at post size of the Mews Agentry, bod. Soft agents for Australia and New Zealand: Messira, Gordon & Ootch, 1841, and 16c Canada, The Ji Cother St. 1931.

Electrical Experiments.

SHOCKING GOIL! The Set of Parts for making 19. BACTEN PARTS, 1/5 petages 3d. each SECTION PARTS PARTS, 1/5 petages 3d. each Box ELEO TRICK SECTION PARTS, 1/5 petages 6d. each Box ELEO TRICKI SECTION PARTS, 1/5 petages 6d. e8ECOLA CHEAR TELEFHONE SET, Complete, 1/9 petages 6d. Avoil Dynamo, 2/3 TEAM SECULES, Wite Lamp, 1/3 the Secule Parts P

You can secure a pair of our Real Russet McGreor Football flories on first payment eath McGreor Football flories on first payment eath McGreor as set out below.

BOYS (11, 21, 21, 31, 19, 40, -10) - down and balance of 2/6 the following weak.

OUT ALLY STATEMENT OF THE CONTROL OF THE CONTRO

BRIGHT (Postas C. Otte).
LARE BROS. (Dept. 2), 8, Arthur Boad, HOLLOWAY, M. 7.
LARE BROS. (Dept. 2), 8, Arthur Boad, HOLLOWAY, M. 7.
HOME CINEMATOGRAPHS from £1; with AUTOMATICR-Winderfrom £3.
Accessories, Standard Films. Stamp for Illustrated Citalogue.—Deak E.
DEAN CINEMA CO. 94, Drayton Arenies, London, W. 13.

MAGIC TRICKS, etc.—Parcais, 2/6, 5/6. Vestriloquist's Instrument. Invisible: Imitate Birds. Price6d. each, 4 for 1/.—T. W. Harrison, 239, Pentonville Rd., London, N.E.

BOYS-HERE'S THE REPEATER YOU WANT!

Do you want a Better Job?

TBLL us which of the subjects mentioned to the subject mentioned to the partial subject mentioned to the partia

CONJURING. Hustrated Catalogue of Tricks, Jokes, Puzzles, 3d.—ECLIPSE NOVELTY CO. (Bept. L), FRANCIS TERRACE, LONDON, N.19.

FILMS FOR SALE, CHEAP, Machines, etc. Stamped en-Film, 1/3.—TYSON & MARSHALL, 89, Castle Boulevard, NOTINGHAM.

VENTRILOQUISM.—Learn this wonderful, laughable art. Failure impossible with our book of easy instructions and amusing dialogues. Only 8d., past paid. Thousands delighted.—Publishers, 80, Oldchurch Road, Cleredon.

WORLD'S CHAMPION BUNNER, Mr. A. SERUBB, CURED BY VIKWIK.

ELM TREE HOTEL, OXFORD. November 17th, 1919.

Sirs.—Thermatian in my knee caused me great opony, and alter styling secretal kinds on the siring secretal kinds of the siring secretal siring secretal siring secretal siring secretal siring and as a general liminari during training, which I see heartily-recommend.—Yours truly ALERED SHRUBB. World's Champion Bunne and Becord-Holder.

INSTANTLY KILLS PAIN

Everyone suffering pain should try the quickest, surest, and safest way of obtaining immediate case. This is the VIKWIK way. No matter how the pain is caused, whether by Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuritis, Neuralgia, Synovitis, Cramp, Neuralgia, Synovitis, Cramp, Sprains, Bruises, and for verty kind of muscular pain. VIKWIK is the limitest thown. VIKWIK stops irri-tation in a remarkable manner. Chilblains and Buross known. VIKWIK stops Iriditation in a remarkable manner. Chiliblains and Burus yield to its soothing effects at once. VIKWIK is combined to the soothing different properties of the soothing children in the soothing childre

Rhenmatism Sprains Bruises Tramp

In 1/3 bottles, large size 3/-. From BOOTS', TAYLOR'S, and all Chemists.

is the greatest drawback in life to any man or woman. If you are nervous, timid, low-spirited, lack self-confidence, will gower, mind concentration, blush or feel awkward in 'the presence others, sent three jenny stamps for particulars of the Mento-Nerve Others, sent three jenny stamps for particulars of the Mento-Nerve Strengthenius Treatment, used in the Navy from Vice-Admiral to Stranga, an in the Army from Colonel to Private, D.S.O.'s, M.O.'s, M.M.'s, and D.O.M.'s. OODFRY ELIOTT: SMITH, Ltd., 527, lumperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C.4:

BIG AND SUCCESSFUL,—To be tall is one of the chief cary to increase your height by the Givan Relentific Transmissions. It is carried out in your own home. Students report from 2 to 5 inches increase, with great benefit to health. Send a postcard for particular and our ZIOD currance to ENQUINY DEFT. A.M.F., 17, STROUD GREEN ROAD, LONDON, N. 4.

FUN FOR ALL! -Yentriloquist's Voice Instrument. Invisible, astonishes, Myntifee. Imitate Birds. Beasts, eds. 1/. P.O. (Yentriloquism Treaties included). - Mass Co., Clereton, Suc.

PHOTO POSTCARDS OF YOURSELF, // 4 4 18 by 10 EX-LABURNESS, 8d. ALSO CHEAP PHOTO MARRIAL SATALOGUE AND SAMPLES FREE.-HACKETTS, JULY BOAD, LIVERPOOL.

"CURLY HAIR!"-"It's wonderful." writes R. 16.000 Fee Proof sent. "WAYEIT" CURLS STRAIGHTEST HAIR. (Stamps accepted.)-EOSS (Dept. G. ), 173, Lew North Ed., Lee

Send 13 of these coupons with call 2 25 direct to the Flest Pan Co.
119, Fleet Street, Lord 14, Feet Will redets by return a Splendin
119, Fleet Street, Lord 14, Feet Will redets by return a Splendin
119, Fleet Street, Lord 14, Feet Foundain Pen, raise 10/6 (Fine, Medium, of Bread Nib). If only 1 coupon is sent, the price is 4/9, 24, being allowed for each active coupon up to 12. Teelect this 4/9, 24, being allowed for each active coupon up to 12. Teelect this between the CMR readers, Satisfaction graatsleed or cach returned. Foreign post extra
Satisfaction graatsleed or cach returned. Foreign post extra Lever Self-Filling Model, with Satety Sup, 2/c sexts.

THE GEM Linkark—No. 713.

EDGAR LAWRENCE, (A Staunch Friend of Leslie Owen.)

(Another Magnificent Art Portrait Study Next Week.)