

BILLY BUNTER'S BANK HOLIDAY!

A NOVEL BANK HOLIDAY ATTRACTION!

(An Amusing Scene in the Magnificent Long, Complete School Tale of the Chums of Greyfriars.) 14-5-1

THE FIRST CHAPTER. On the War-path !

AND me that bat, Lonzy!"

Billy Bunter blinked at Alonzo Todd across the table of Study No. 7. The Duffer of Greyfriars stared. Such a a request, coming from Billy of the Remove, was extra-Bunter ordinary.

What Billy Bunter wanted with a was sully Bunter wanted with a cricket-bat was a mystery. He seldom played cricket; and when he did, he resembled George Robey rather than Jack Hobbs.

"Getting deaf?" asked Bunter im tiently. "Gimme that bat!" patiently. Alonzo reached for the bat, and handed it over. "You are going out to hit goals on Little Side, my dear Bunter?" he asked.

"No, you ass! I'm going to practise in this study!"

in this study!"
"Fup-pup-practise in this study?" stut-tered Alonzo.
"Certainly! I'm going to practise a few strokes just to get my hand in, you know. The Remove are playing St. Jim's on Whit-Monday, and I want to be in form."

"But surely you are not participating in the event in question?" exclaimed exclaimed Billy Bunter gave a snort.

"I should like to see the Remove try to win the match without me." he said Why, they'd come a hopeless cropper. St. Jim's are a very hot crowd. I've been there, so I know what I'm talking

"Has Wharton definitely selected you

"Well, not exactly," said Bunter.
"But when I show him my form he'll simply jump at me!"
"I dare say he will!" murmured

Alonzo

Billy Bunter's plump fingers closed on the handle of the bat.

"I've been studying cricket a good deal lately." he said. "Of course, I know the game inside out. But even the best cricketer can pick up a few useful tips.
Now, you watch me while I play back!"
"Play back?" echoed Alonzo. "Why,

I understood that football was the only game in which one could play back!"

"Ass!" said Bunter witheringly, "I mean playing back from the the ball, instead of playing forward to util."

"Forward!" said Alonzo, purious in "in me!" murmured Alonzo, transport to the country of too

Bunter regarded Alonzo with the superior contempt with which a general might regard a lance-corporal.

I'll show you what I mean by play-back," he said. "Imagine that ing back," he said. "Imagine that picture at the other end of the study is bowling to me—"
Alonzo Todd gazed at his fat study-mate in concern. "Are you sure you feel quite all right, my dear Bunter?" "Of course, my dear ass!"

"You are not suffering from a temporary lapse of sanity?"

"Shurrap! Now, supposing that picture is bowling to me. Instead of running out to hit the ball, I play back at it-so!"

Billy Bunter took one step to the rear, and the bat swung backwards. Crash !

There was a shattering, splintering sound; and the glass panel of the bookcase was smashed to smithereens. "Oh crumbs!"

Billy Bunter surveyed the wreckage with a dazed expression on his face.

Alonzo looked horrified.
"My dear Bunter!"
shocked tones. - "You Bunter!" Have, I fear,
"You have, I fear,
Peter will caused irreparable damage. be dreadfully angry when he beholds

Bless less Peter! Accidents will hap-said Bunter, pulling himself to r. "Now, supposing I want to cut gether. "Now,

"Don't you think you had better put that bat down?" said Alonzo. "You will be doing yourself an injury."

"Rats! Just you watch me! With quick jerk of the wrists, I cut the ball "But there is no ball!" protested Fathead! It's an imaginary one!" "My poor Bunter! I am convinced that you have either been drinking—"

"Drinking!" howled Bunter.

"Or that the heat of the sun has sed you to suffer from hallucinations. "I don't know what you mean by Lucy

"How very distressing! When a person is mad he generally regards others as being in a similar condition. I feel convinced-

"There's only one thing I want you to feel convinced about," said Bunter, "and that's my late cut. With a sharp turn of the wrists, I send the ball whize-

ing away at right angles—thus! Bunter fairly let himself go. The only thing that whizzed away at right angles was the bat, which came into volent contact with the study window. A shower of broken glass rained down into the Close.

Alonzo Todd jumped up from the table,

nd edged nervously to the door.
"Where are you going?" demanded Bunter.

"I was about to make arrangements for a doctor to be called in." said Alonzo. "These barbarous, Bolshevistic tendencies on your part must be checked -and the sooner the better!'

"What utter rot! I was just practis-

"Your practising is very detrimental to the study furniture, my dear Bunter! I entreat you to desist. I have a terrible premonition that you will commit man-slaughter!"

"A pane of glass here and there won't matter," said Bunter lightly. "I'll pay for them when my postal-order comes. Now, I'll just pull the ball round to leg

Alonzo beat a hurried retreat. He was about to wrench the door open when Billy Bunter put his leg-pull into execution. "Yaroooooop!" The face of the bat smote Alonzo Todd with a sounding report on the rear of his person.

"Sorry, Lonzy, old chap!" said Bunter. "But you shouldn't have got in the way, you know. Now I'll show you my forward stroke-

But Alonzo did not wait to see more. He put himself on the other side of the door with astonishing agility.

"Ow! There can be no further doubt about Bunter's condition. about Bunter's condition. The poor fellow is mad—utterly and completely!" "Hallo, hallo, hallo!" ejaculated Bob Cherry, coming along the passage with the other members of the Famous Five.

Copyright in the United States of America.

"Who's your companion in lunacy, Lonzy?"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

Alonzo drew himself up and tenderly rubbed his back.

rubbed his back.
"Yow! I have been assaulted and half-killed by a raying, rampant maniac! I feel exceedingly sore and uncomfortable. My Uncle Benjamin—"
"Burst your Uncle Benjamin!" said Johnny Bull. "What's happened?"

Johnny Bull. "What's happened?" Alonzo pointed dramatically at the door of Study No. 7. "He's in there!" he exclaimed in awed tones. "Listen, my dear fellows!"

Even as Alonzo spoke there was a terrible crash inside the study.

The Famous Five threw open the door and rushed in.

They were just in time to see the clock turn a double-somersault into the fender. A couple of pictures had shared the same fate a second previously.

Harry Wharton & Co. stood spellbound.

"M-m my hat!" gasped Bob Cherry.

"Bunter, you ass—"
"Bunter, you howling lunatic Billy Bunter swung round, bat in hand

His face was nearly purple with exer-tion, but he looked capable of doing still more damage.

"I say, you fellows, I'm getting in a bit of practice."

table! It's about the only piece of furni-ture left whole in the study!"

The others were about to comply when Peter Todd came in.
The leader of Study No. 7 uttered a howl of rage. "What the merry dickens?

now of rage.

"What the merry dickens? Has an earthquake happened, or wint!"
"It's only Bunter." explained Bob Cherry. "He's been trying a few strokes—and now we're going to try a few!

Peter Todd, infuriated at the sight of the wreckage, needed no second hidding.
The bat was forn from Billy Bunter's grap, and the fat junior was heaved on to the table and pinned down by willing hands.

to the table and planted when by when, hands.

"Give him beans!" said Peter Todd. Harry Wharton nodded.
Whack, whack, whack!
The bat rose and fell, and a cloud of dust went up from Billy Bunter's tight-dust weat, up 1700 Buly June 28 and fitting trousers.

"Yarooop! Help! Fire! Murder! Yah! Chuckit! Stoppit!"
Whack, whack, whack! Harry Wharton did great execution.
By the time he had finished Billy Bunter felt as, if he had been through a mangle. He slid down from the table on to the floor, and lay there making a content of the floor, and lay there making a on to the floor, and lay there making a noise like a punctured football. Ow-ow-ow-ow-ow! "Ow-ow-ow-ow-ow:

"Serves you jolly well right!" said Peter Todd. "I'll teach you to smash up the happy home like this, you mad idiot!"

Beasts!" moaned Billy Bunter. "Tve a jolly good mind not to offer you my a folly good mind not to offer you my services against St. Jim's! I hope you get the licking of your lives—"" "Hand me that bat again, Toddy!" said Harry Wharton.

"Ow! I—I mean. I hope you win handsomely!" groaned Bunter.

That's better! Wharton. said

"Come on, you fellows! Tea's ready in Study No. 1. We'll leave Toddy to settle the question of damages. And the Famous Five retired, leaving

Peter Todd to create order out of chaos. and to impress upon the mind of Billy Bunter that great batsmen are born and not made, and that they do not start their careers by smashing everything within range.

THE SECOND CHAPTER. Many Called, But Few Chosen !

EA in Study No. 1 was not a success

There were plenty of good things, but there were plenty of interruptions as well. Vernon-Smith was the first fellow to

"Hallo, Smithy!" said Bob Cherry, jerking a chair back from the table. "Come and share the festive kipper, old sport!"

"No, thanks!" grinned Vernon-Smith

"I looked in to see if I was down to play against St. Jim's, that's all!"

"Oh, good!"
And Squiff walked off, humming a and squar walked off, humming a merry tune.

"Now, perhaps, we shall be left in peace!" growled Johnny Bull. "My kipper's stone-cold!"

Same here!" "The coldfulness of the esteemed and strong-smelling kipper is terrific!" Bang, bang.

The study door quivered as a ponderous fist struck it from without. "Come in, Fathead!" sang out Bob Cherry. It was Bolsover major this time.

"Look here, Wharton," he said in his blunt way, "am I going to travel—

"Yes," said Nugent. "As quick as you like! There's the door!" "Ha, ha, ha!"

Bolsover glared. "Am I going to travel to St. Jim's to play in the match?" Harry Wharton shook his head-

"Sorry!" he said. "You're not a bad player, Bolsover, but there's such a lot of giddy talent knocking around that I've had to leave you out."

"You hain't goin' hout of these 'ere gates!" said Gosling firmly.
is horders!" Billy Bunter grinned. (See Chapter 4.)

"Of course you are," said Wharton. Why should I leave you out?" "Well, every fellow in the Remove has told me that he's down to play, so I wondered whether you were going to include me as fortieth man!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"So long as my name's down I'm happy," said Vernon-Smith. "I don't fancy cooling my heels at Greyfriars on a giddy Bank Holiday."

"No. rather not!" Vernon-Smith nodded to the Famous

Five, and departed. Scarcely had his footsteps died away when Squiff appeared in the doorway-"Yes!" said Wharton. Squiff stared.

"W-w-what?" he exclaimed.

"I know exactly what you were going to ask me," said the captain of the Re-move; "and the answer's 'Yes.' Now buzz off !"

"I'm down to play against St. Jim's?" said Squiff.

Yes!" roared the Famous Five in "My hat! Do you think I want to spend Bank Holiday in this beastly prison? I'm jolly well going to have a place in the team-"Door or window?" asked Bob Cherry politely. "Choose your own exit!"

Bolsover major saw that he would get no change out of the Famous Five. He retired from the study, slamming the door behind him with terrific violence.

Harry Wharton & Co. got on with

"Peace at last!" said Nugent.

Tap, tap!
"Oh crumbs!"
Fisher T. Fish, the Yankee junior, was the next visitor.

"I guess I'm down to play against St. Jim's?" he asked. Bob Cherry chuckled.

"I kinder sorter calculate you'll have to guess again, Fishy!"

Look hyer "Can't. It's a strain on the eyesight!"

"I guess Br.r.r THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 592.

THE BEST 40. LIBRARY THE "BOYS' FRIEND" 40. LIBRARY, MONLOR

Fisher T. Fish glared wrathfully at air, and smote him in various parts of pressing anybody by what he said that the Famous Five.

"Am I down to play, or am I not!" "Yarocoooch!" to speak.
"Yarocooch!" he exclaimed. said Wharton, "Now buzz

The Yankee junior still lingered in the doorway; but he departed suddenly and swiftly as a cushion, deftly aimed by Johnny Bull, caught him under the

Johnny Dun,
"Yarooooop!"
Fisher T. Fish came to grief against the wall of the passage.
"I'm fed up with these blessed interruptions!" growled Whartou
He took up a pen, and wvote out the """ announcement, which was announcement, which was following announcement, which was pinned up on the outside of the study door:

TO WOULD BE CRICKETERS—

The chap who comes in here to spout, Or make the place a wreck; Will enter on his feet, no doubt,

But go out on his neck ! St. Jim's The team to play against St. on Bank Holiday has been det chosen, and will consist of the following:

ing:
H. Wharton (captain), F. Nugent, R.
Cherry, J. Bull, H. J. R. Singh, M.
Linley, P. Todd, H. Vernon-Smith, S. Q.
I. Field, R. Penfold, and G. Bulstrode.
Roserves: R. E. Russell and R. D.

Ogilvy. NO OTHERS NEED APPLY!

(Signed) H. WHARTON, Captain of Cricket."

Many footsteps became audible in the passage after this notice had been displayed; but most of the fellows, after stopping to read it, went on their way. But still the Famous Five were not destined to be left alone.

Long before the odour of the fried hippers had died away, Coker of the Fifth burst into the study without knock-

"Look here, you fags—"
"Look here, you fags—"
Five warlike glances were directed at Horace Coker.

"I've decided to sacrifice the pleasures of Bank Holiday in order to come over to St. Jim's and umpire," said Coker loftily.

"Very noble of you," said Harry Wharton, "but we don't want an um-pire! Tom Merry's seeing to that." "Rats! You don't want a common or garden umpire-

"Then why volunteer?" asked Bob Cherry.

"Ha, ha, ha!" Coker frowned.

"I don't want any of your cheek," he said. "I've gone out of my way to offer you my services, and——"
"Declined—without thanks!" said

Wharton. "Now, hop it! We want to finish our tea Coker clenched his big fists.
"You-you-" he stuttered. "I de

"You-you—"he stuttered. "I de-ride to da you a good turn and instead of bubbling over with gratitude, and all the rest of it, you chuck cold water on my intentions:" and the something else if you don't are the something else if you don't are the something else if you don't are the something else if you far the something else if you far the something else if you far the something else if you like your face away and pawn it! Take your face away and pawn it!

Isn't it time you started wearing a

That was too much for Coker. With a roar like an angry bull he advanced towards the Famous Five.

But Harry Wharton & Co., experts in the art of war, acted swiftly and decisively. Before Coker could reach his objective, a swarm of missiles sailed through the THE MAGNET LIBRARY.—No. 592.

A kipper landed fairly and squarely on Coker's cheek, and a couple of cushions caught him in the chest, bowling him over.

The Fifth-Former sat down heavily and hurriedly on the floor of the study. The expression on his face rendered a mask more desirable than ever.

"You—you cheeky young sweeps "Out with him!" exclaimed exclaimed .Bob Cherry, springing to his feet.

The next moment five boots clumped upon the lanky form of Horace Coker, and propelled him through the doorway and into the nasara.

and propelled him through the doorway and into the passage.

Bulstrode, Russell, and Oglivy were standing outside, reading Harry Whar-ton's notice, and they completed the good work.

Coker was shunted along for a few more yards; then he scrambled to his feet, and beat an undignified retreat to his own quarters.

Horace Coker's unselfish intentions had somehow missed fire!

THE THIRD CHAPTER. Left Rehind !

HOLIDAY length—a clear and cloudless day. Harry Wharton & Co. were up with the lark.

Billy Bunter, who was up with that somewhat lazier bird, the sparrow, rolled out into the Close just as the Remove Eleven, with Russell and Ogilvy as re-serves, were about to start off for St.

Jim's. The Owl of the Remove could some

The Own of the Remove come some times be very determined. The other fellows called it obstinate. Anyway, Bunter had made up his mind to get to St. Jim's, and get there he would, though the skies fell.

"I—I say, Wharton, old chap—" Harry Wharton, who was wrestling ith a huge cricket bag, grunted.
"Not so much of your 'old chap!"

he said.
"Oh, really, you know! I was going to suggest that I gave you a hand with that bag."
"All said Wharton, "You

All serene," said Wharton.

"All serene," said Wharton. "You can yank it to the station, if you like. But you're not coming any farther." "Look-berre," said Bunter desperately. "You'll want me badly when you get to St. Jim's. When the game is goined and against you you'll be pining for me."

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha;"
"We'il ring you up on the 'phone, Bunty," said Bob Cherry. "Then you can borrow Prout's motor-take, and rush over to the rescue."

I believe you'restrying to pull my leg, Bob Cherry-

"You couldn't come over to St. Jim's, ven as a spectator," said Nugent. even as a spectator," said Nugent.
"You've got some lines to do for Quelchy. He gave you two hundred for going to sleep in class, I remember!"
"Blow Quelchy! Does he think I'm going to grind out mouldy lines on a Bank Holiday?"

A sudden hush fell upon the cricketers. Unseen by the shortsighted Owl, Mr. Quelch himself, attired in a golfing suit, Queech nimseit, attree in a goining suit, had appeared on the scene.

"Quelchy's always barging in at a time like this!" went on Billy Bunter. "If he had his own way he'd abolish Bank Holidays. Fancy expecting a fellow to swot indoors on a day like this!

Holidays. Fairly expecting a renow so; swot indoors on a day like this! Quelchy's a beastly killjoy—"
"Oh!" gasped the juniors.
Bunter heard the gasp, and he concluded that he had made an impression.
So seldom did Bunter succeed in im-to speak.

"I suppose Quelchy wilf spend his Bank Holiday at the typewriter, ham-mering out his silly old 'History of Grey-friars,' "Bunter went on. "It's about friars," Bunter went on. "It's about time that blessed history was finished. But Quelohy will never find a publisher r it—not in a thousand years!"
Mr. Quelch stood as if turned to stone.

His lips were moving; but articulate speech refused to come. Peter Todd shot out his foot, hoping to check Billy Bunter's ready flow of to check Buly Bunter's ready now or oratory. "Ow! What beast kicked my shin?" gasped Bunter. "It hurt! As a matter of fact, that's just what I should like to do to old Quelchy!" "Bunter!"

The Remove-master had at last re-covered the power of speech. His voice was like the detonation of a bomb.

Billy Bunter blinked.

Billy Bunter blinked.
"Who's that trying to give a cheap imitation of Quelchy's voice?" he exclaimed. "I never heard such a silly dog's yap! Oh crumbs! Momeny that!" Bunter's face turned almost green as he caught sight of the Formester. "La didn't know you were I-I didn't know you were master.

master. "I—I didn't know you weetere, sir "!

"That is pierfectly obvious, Buntert":

"That is pierfectly obvious, Buntert":

"That is pierfectly obvious, Buntert":

"That is pierfectly obvious, Bunter "

"That is a disrespectful manner, Bunter?"

"Ow! I—I wasn't—I didn't—I never!" stammered the fat junior helplessly.

"You appear to have resented the fact that I gave you an imposition," said Mr. Quelch. "That imposition is now appear to have seed to Quelch. "That imposition is new doubled. You will at once proceed to the Form-room, and commence writing it." "Oh crumba!"

"Oh crumbs!"
"But for the fact that I have to keep a golfing appointment with Mr. Prout I should chastise you severely," said Mr. Quelch.

Oh, really, sir, I-

"Go and do your imposition, Bunter!"
"But—but I've got an important appointment as well, sir." "Nonsense!"

"I'm going over to St. Jim's, sir, to-to lead these fellows on to victory in a cricket-match."

cricket-match."

Mr. Quelch compressed his lips.
"I forbid you, here and now, to do anything of the sort!" he snapped. "Do not dare to disobey me! Unless you not dare to disobey me! Unless you proceed at once to the Form-room, Bunter, I shall thrash you!"
"Oh dear! It won't be my fault if

Mr. Quelch made a stride towards Bunter, and the Owl of the Remove, who could not fail to observe the stormsignals on the Form-master's brow, promptly turned and fled.

The prospect of spending the morning

perhaps the day—in an empty Form-room, filling up sheet after sheet of im-pot paper, didn't appeal to Bunter in the least. But it was impossible to argue with

Mr. Quelch. When Bunter had gone, the Remove-master turned to the cricketers.

"I trust you will have a good game, my boys," he said. my boys," he said. "Thank you, sir!"

"I feel sure you will benefit by your day's outing. You will come back to your Form-work with renewed vigour."

Y-e-es, sir! The juniors were rather doubtful on this score. But they appreciated Mr. Quelch's good wishes, all the same.

The Remove-master nedded to Harry Wharton & Co., and went off to keep his appointment with Mr. Prout on the golf-links. The cricketers, in high spirits, started off for the station.

"No luck for Bunter!" grinned Squiff.

"He thought he was going to be our strength and stay at St. Jim's; but he "No jolly fear!"
"Poor old Bunter!" said Peter Todd, with a sigh. "I've tried to bring him up in the way he should go, but it's N.G. And now he's got to spend his Bank Holiday grinding out line."

The juniors had precious little sympathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a standard of the precious little sympathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a support of the sympathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a support of the sympathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a support of the sympathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a support of the sympathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a support of the sympathy to the sympathy to be support of the sympathy to be supported by the sympathy to be su pathy to waste on Billy Bunter as a rule, but they could not help feeling a trifle sorry for him now.

It was no joke to be kept indoors on a day like this, when all the other fellows were basking in the sunshine. The Form-room would be a very bleak and barren place on a Bank Holiday— little better than a prison, in fact. In the excitement of the forthcoming match, however, Billy Bunter and his burdens were soon forgotten.

The Grevfriars cricketers boarded their train, and were soon speeding through the fair countryside of Kent, past green meadow and shady lane, looking forward with great eagerness and excite-ment to the tussle with their old and tried rivals of St. Jim's.

THE FOURTH CHAPTER.

In Durance Vile ! BULY BUNTER groaned.
It could hardly be said that his cup of happiness was filled to overflowing. Through the windows of the Formroom came the festive shouts of the holiday-makers.

The fat junior rose to his feet and looked out into the Close.

Temple & Co. of the Fourth were in their boating flannels, evidently bent upon a day on the river.

In another corner of the Close Bolsover major and Skinner and Stott were holding a deep discussion. They were probably planning to spend the day a less profitable manner than the Fourth-Formers.

Other fellows were thronging out of gates, too. Some were going to explore the old caves on the seashore. Others were bound for Courtfield, where the usual Bank Holiday attractions, in the form of fairs and merry-go-rounds, were due to take place.

The call of the open air seemed irresistible.

Bunter realised, at length, that he was bunter reassed, at length, that ne was practically alone in the great building.

"It's a shame!" muttered the fat junior. "A downright, rotten shame!" He had not started his lines. What was more, he didn't intend to start them. For a long time Billy Bunter sat writhing in his place of captivity.

Then he rose to his feet, his little round eyes fairly gleaming behind his spectacle "I'll do it!" he said aloud. "I'm fed up with sticking here. Quelchy's gone off to play golf, and he won't know any-thing about it if I bunk."

Billy Bunter rolled to the door.

His determination to go to St. Jim's was as strong as ever.

He meant to defy Mr. Quelch, and to make a bid for freedom. "I'm not going to stay here and starve!" he muttered, as he emerged he emerged into the bright sunshine of the Close.

"There's no grub to be had anywhere, and Mrs. Mimble's closed her shop. I and Mrs. Mimble's closed her shop. In might not get a game if I go to St. Jim's, but I'm bound to get a feed!"

Bunter moistened his lips as he thought of the fine repast he would have at St. Jim's. Tom Merry & Co. knew how to entertain a visiting team. all they always provided the finest fare for their guests.

The fact that he would be an unbidden uest didn't worry Bunter in the least. He was a past master in the art of thrust-ing himself in where he was not wanted. And then an awful fact dawned upon the fat junior.

He was stony! How could he possibly get to St. Jim's without paying his way?

. It would be comparatively easy to dodge the railway officials at Friardale. But Bunter was not so sure about the people at the other end. And there would be a scrutiny of tickets at Way-land; that was certain. It was useless to think of travelling without paying his fare.

"Oh crumbs!" groaned Burter, in dismay. "This fairly puts the kybosh on it! And there's no one I can squeeze a loan out of. All the fellows have gone out—even that slacker Mauly." Billy Bunter opened the door of the bicycle-shed and blinked in.

The shed was empty. All the fellows who owned bikes were either using them or had lent them to someone else.

A wild thought flashed into Bunter's

A wild thought flashed into Bunter's mind of borrowing Mr. Prout's motor-cycle. But his knowledge of motor-cycles, unlike Sam Weller's knowledge of London, was neither extensive nor peculiar. He would be certain to come a cropper. What was he to do? With all his determination he could not walk to St. Jim's. Physical exertion was distasteful to the flabby Owl. Even if he felt in the mood for tramp-not reach St. Jim's till nightfall.

"It's no go!" muttered Bunter.

"Bank Holiday's going to be a wash-out, after all!"

He turned back with a grunt.

There was nothing to do—nowhere to o. He was a prisoner at Greyfriars! As he was about to re-enter the building, however, Billy Bunter stopped snow. He was not very observant, as a rule, but his eye had alighted upon a pocket-book which lay on the ground directly beneath the window of Gerald Loder's however, Billy Bunter stopped short.

Bunter stooped and picked it up. "My hat! What a lucky find!"

"My hat! What a lucky find!"
The fat junior blinked cautiously around. The coast was clear. He turned the pocket-book over in his fat hand.

fat hand.

The initials, "G. L.," were plainly embossed on the front.

"It's Loder's!" murmured Bunter.

He would have been more correct to say that it had been Loder's. The black sheep of the Sixth was not likely to see sneep or the Sixth was not need to see that pocket-book again—especially if it contained anything of value. Billy Bunter had never yet been able to dis-criminate between "meum." and tuum."

With feverish fingers Bunter opened the book. Two pieces of paper fluttered on to the ground. Bunter was upon them with the swoop of a hawk. The next moment his eyes fairly glittered.

"What luck!" he exclaimed. corn in Egypt, and no mistake!"
One of the documents was a letter—a note to Loder from one of his shady companions outside the school; and the other was a five-pound note : Billy Bunter's problem was solved at

He had money in his possession-money enough to make this particular Bank Holiday a thing of beauty and a joy for Slipping the notebook into his pocket, the Owl of the Remove scuttled down to the gates.

He met an unexpected barrier here, in Gosling shuffled out of his lodge, and eyed the fat junior with extreme dis-

"Wot I says is this 'ere," he began.
"I've 'ad horders from Mr. Quelch that you're not to be hallowed hout of gates, Master Bunter!"

favour.

"Oh, come off, Gossy! I'm not going far. I—I'm just going out to—to pick a few flowers, you know!" But Gosling's suspicions were fairly roused

"You hain't goin' hout of these 'ere rates !" he said firmly. "Horders is orders!" gates! Billy Bunter grinned. For a moment he was taken aback, but only for a moment. The gates were open, but Bunter knew that if he tried to push his way past Gosling he would be repulsed with heavy losses, so to speak.

There was another way out, however. Bunter had not studied the art of ventriloquism for nothing.

"Gosling, what is this bottle of gin doing in your lodge?"
"It was the Head's voice—at least, it was a perfect imitation of it. Oh, my heye! Gosling turned back towards his lodge to meet-as he expected-the vials of Dr. Locke's wrath. No sooner was the porter's back turned than Billy Bunter fairly shot through the open gateway. He was free-free as the air he breathed!

An angry shout behind him told him that Gosling had tumbled to the decep-

Bunter grinned, and quickened his pace.
"Gossy can shout till he's jolly well husky!" he chuckled. "My hat! It was jolly thoughtful of old Loder to drop his notebook like that! Lucky thing for Loder that I found it, too. If anyone else saw that letter from the landlord of the Cross Keys Loder would be slung out of Greyfriars on his neck!"

In appropriating the notebook and its contents Bunter was guilty of theft. But he was far too stupid to realise the seriousness of his action.

seriousness or his action.

Had he stopped to think, it might have occurred to him that he himself was going the right way to be kicked out of Greyfriars.

But # was not Bunter's way to stop and think. He had no thinking apparatus, to begin with. And so, feeling that life was still worth living, the Owl of the Remove continued his headlong flight to St. Jim's !

THE FIFTH CHAPTER. Not Nice for Loder !

ASH it all!" Loder of the Sixth was looking-and feeling-very much annoyed. He paced up and down his study on the morning of Bank Holiday with a frowning brow. He had missed his notebook—a fact which made the rascally prefect both upset and uneasy.

There were good grounds for Gerald Loder's uneasiness THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 592.

That notebook contained a letter which, if it came before the eyes of the authorities, would bring about his instant expulsion.

Jerry Hawke had written the letter. It was an invitation to Loder to spend the at the Cross Keys, where—in the words of Mr. Hawke—several sporting gents would be present.

The rascal added his congratulationsthey were not sincere, of course-to Loder for having won five pounds at cards a few evenings before. Loder shuddered as he pictured the effect that letter would have upon Dr.

Locke.

To have lost the letter was bad enough; to have lost the five pound note as well was maddening.

The prefect continued to pace up and down, trying to account terious loss of his notebook.

There was a tap on the door of the study, and Carne entered.
"Hallo!" he said. "You look pretty down in the mouth, old man. What's down in the mouth, old man. "I've lost my notebook!" growled

Loder. "Careless ass!"

Loder scowled.
"It isn't funny," he said. "There was a fiver inside, and a note from Jerry Hawke." Phew !"

- Carne looked serious at once

"How on earth did you lose the blessed thing?" he asked.
"That's what I've been trying to puzzle out. I know I had it as recently as yesterday afternoon. I must have dropped it somewhere."

"Or mislaid it," suggested Carne. Perhaps you shied it in your desk, or in your Sunday boots, or something.

Let's have a hunt for it."

And the two Sixth-Formers proceeded to ransack Loder's study.

They turned out the contents of the desk; they explored the bookcase, the mantelpiece—everything. But there was no sign of a pocket-book.

"No go!" said Carne. "When did.

you first make this painful discovery? "This morning!" growled Loder. "I felt in all my pockets, and drew blank."
"Did you go to the Cross Keys last night?"
"Yes."

Yes."

"Yes."
"Then you probably dropped it on the way back. Can't you remember hearing a thud, or something, as you walked along?" along? Loder shook his head.

He could remember very little of what had happened the previous evening. He had been on one of his nocturnal expeditions to the Cross Keys; and, although he had touched nothing stronger than weak cider, the stuffy atmosphere of the billiard-room had him to such an extent that he could not clearly recollect his return journey to Greyfriars.

"Have you looked underneath your study window?" asked Carne. "My hat! I hadn't thought of that. Let's come and look now."

Let's come and look now And the seniors went downstairs.

But the pocket-book was nowhere to e seen. It had passed into Billy e seen. Bunter's hands half an hour previously. Carne reflected for a moment.

"Look here," he said, at length. "I wouldn't mind betting you didn't drop the thing at all!"
"What!" roured Loder. "You think I'm hunting high and low just for a joke?"

"No: it's my opinion that you've been robbed."

THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 592.

"Eh?"
"While you were at the Cross Keys last night pocket," sai ght somebody picked your said Carne, with conviction. "It sounds a bit steep, I know, but that bounder Hawke isn't to be trusted."

Loder jumped.
"You think Hawke pinched my pocketpok?" he exclaimed. book?" "I'm practically sure of it."

Loder turned abruptly into the building. "What's the next move?" asked Carne.

"I'm going down to the Cross Keys at once, to ask Hawke what he knows about this bizney."
"Good! I'll come along."

The seniors got their caps, and set out or the village together.

Loder strode along swiftly, and said othing; but his suspicions against Jerry Hawke, slight at first, grew more and more powerful.

This was just the sort of shady trick to be expected of the rascally landlord. By the time the Cross Keys was reached suspicion had ripened into certainty.

Loder was looking very grim as he led the way into the billiard-room. Jerry Hawke was there, greesy and affable as usual. He was acting as marker for a couple of gentlemen in loud check suits who were playing a hundred up.

"Afternoon, sir!" said Jerry Hawke,
as Loder came in.

as Loder came in.

The prefect glared.

"I haven't come here for formalities," he said. "I've got a straight question for you, Mr. Hawke, and I want a straight answer!"
"That's the stuff!" said Carne approv-

Mr. Hawke didn't turn a hair.

seemed perfectly cool and self-possessed.
"Fire away, sir!" he said.

Loder advanced towards the landlord.

"I have reason to believe," he said,
"that I was robbed in this place last night."
"My eye!" My eye!"

The coolness of Mr. Hawke vanished in an instant. He became considerably As for the two billiard-players, laid down their cues and looked daggers and down their cues and looked daggers at the Greyfriars prefect.

"Ho!" said Jerry-Hawke, at length.
"So you think my establishment is a den of thieves—what?". of thieves—what?"
"I think," said Loder deliberately,
"that you took advantage of me last night and stole my pocket-book!"
"Great pip!" ejaculated one of the

"That's strong langwidge to use honest man. Put it across him, to an honest man. Jerry! Mr. Hawke promptly stepped up Loder. For once in a way, he was really mnocent; and the fact that he had been wrongfully accused made him savage. "Get out!" he said thickly. "I've a good mind to 'ave the lor on yer for sayin' sich things! Get off my premises, or—" innocent; and the fact that he had been like a pistol-shot across the face of the rascally landlord.

Loder's open palm came with a report

Jerry Hawke recled.

But before Loder could continue his furious onslaught the other two men

They were powerfully-built fellows, and Loder and Carne went down before their fierce onrush like chaff before the reaper.

Desperately the Sixth-Formers strove to regain their feet; but Jerry Hawke Carne, struggling furiously, were bundled out into the street.
"Now cut off," said Jerry Hawke, breathing hard, "afore I fotches the perlice!

"Ow!" "Yow!"

"Oh, my nose!"
"The beastly ruffians—"
Loder and Carne sorted themselves out with some difficulty, and limped away. of brief struggle gle had been of brief considerable damage had duration: but been done to the personal appearance of

been done to the pursuans regular the victims.
Loder's nose was already beginning to swell; and Carne looked as if he had become entangled with a lawn-mower.
"Oh crumbs' "gasped Loder. "It was you who dragged me into this!"
"Why, you - you - " spluttered Carne. "I was doing you a good

"Oh, dry, up! Precious fine Bank Holiday this is! I'm enjoying myself up to the hilb-I don't think! Why did you want to interfere in the first you place?"

Carne clenched his fists, and it looked for a moment as if there would be still further casualties But the Sixth-Former controlled himself with an effort, and accompanied Gerald Loder in sullen silence to Greyfriars. For two fellows, at any rate, Holiday was anything but blissful!

THE SIXTH CHAPTER. The Match with St. Jim's !

TELCOME, little strangers!" Monty Lowher, of St.

Monty Lowher, of St.

Jim's, uttered that cheery greeting to the Greyfriars juniors as they tumbled out of the train at Rylcombe Station

Quite a crowd of St. Jim's fellows had Quite a crowd of St. Jim's fellows had turned out to meet the visitors. The Terrible Three of the Shell were there; and so were Figgins, Kerr, and Wynn, the celebrated New House trio. Jack Blake, Herries, and Digby, of the Fourth, were acting as a sort of body-guard to Arthur Augustus D'Arcy, at re-as Monty Lowther pointed out, had to be kept under restraint, The swell of St. Jim's jammed his monocle into his eye, and beamed upon Harry Wharton & Co.

"Awfully glad to see you again, deah boys!" he said cordially. "Of course, you're goin' to get a feahful thwashin', you by the Roma was a series of the series of the series of the spirit of bwothalthy affection which exists between us.

"Hear, hear," checkled Digby. "Good of seabag!"

old gas-bag!"
"Weally, Dig, I vewy much wesent that wemark—" that wemark—"sold that wemark—"Oh, cut the eackle, Gussy!" said Tom Merry. "Once you get fairly wound up, it will be time to draw stumps before we start !"

"Ha, ha, ha!" A brake was waiting outside the station, and the rival teams rattled merrily away to St. Jim's.

Lunch was served on the cricket-ground—a mere snack, as Fatty Wynn mourafully expressed it—and then the real business of the day began.

Tom Merry spun the coin, and Harry Wharton guessed-wrongly.

Jim's skipper decided to bat first. Matches between Friars and Saintswhether the senior or the lower sections were involved-were always productive of keen tussles. of keen tussles.

A dense crowd—mainly composed of juniors—had assembled on seats in front of the pavilion.

A cheer went up as Tom Merry and Talbot, looking very fit and confident, stepped out to open the innings for the home side.

The bowling was shared by Hurres Singh and Vernon-Smith. Both were dead on the mark.

Runs came slowly. Tom Merry and his partner wished to lay a solid found-ation; and they took no risks.

Nearly half an hour had elapsed when 10 went up on the telegraph-board.

The crowd began to yawn.
"One of these days," murmured Monty Lowther, "I shall write a book on the tameness of modern cricket, Why doesn't our Tommy hit out?"

"Because he's wise in his old age," said Jack Blake. "If you try to hit out at that dusky fellow's howling you generally find yourself trotting back to the pavilion."

Hurree Singh was certainly bowling at the top of his form. And he was well backed up in the field.

Hungry for catches, the men in the slips crouched low; and in the long-field slips croiched low; and in the long-field Mark Linley was active, and alert. If a ball were smitten high in that direction, there would be no mercy for the smiter. It looked, for a time, as if the Saints would monopolies the batting all day; but presently Taibot was run out. Squiff had gathered up the leather and burded it in with unerring aim while the St. Jim's fellow was barely half-way down.

the pitch.
After Talbot's departure the game

After Tailot's departure the game took a brighter turn.
Redfern of the new House came in to bat; and on his day Reddy was one of the finest junior bats at St. Jim's. On this occasion he surpassed himself. He was careful to take no liberties with Hurres Singh; but Vernon-Smith occasionally sent down a loose ball, and when that happened a 4 or a 6 was recorded in the score-book. The score had put on flesh considerably when Tom Merry left, clean bowled by Hurree Singh.

And no collapse followed, either.

The rest of the batsmen acquitted themselves well, and Arthur Augustus D'Arcy contributed a brilliant 24 to the D'Arey contributed a brilliant 24 to the St Jim's total of 130.

"Not so bed," gaid Figgins, as he un-corked a bottle of gaid Figgins, as he un-put your best into it, Fatty, we shall get the beggars out for under a hunded."

hundred."

Fatty Wynn grunted.

You can's expect me to do miracles on an empty stomach," he said. "My lunch wouldn't have satisfied an infant sparrow!"

News.

sparrow!"
"Never mind, old top!" said Kerr.
"There's going to be a tas interval as soon as Gerytriars are all out. And it's a bumper spread, too. Look!"
With gistening eyes, Fatty Wynn watched a number of tage carrying cakes and pastries to a far corner of the field, where tables had been set out in readiness.

"That's the style!" said the plump junior. "I only hope those kids don't start gorging on the sly. Those tables are too far away for a fellow to see what's aping on."

nre too far away for a reliew to see what's going "said Figgins. "If you do the service, and take three wickets with three balls, we'll let you wolf as much grub as you like!" Fatty Wynn bearned. "Is that a go!" he oxclaimed. "Yes—homest Injun!" of walimited.

The darking prospect of unlimited tuck, acted as a spur to the Falstaff of St. Jim's.

He meant to win that wager; and he won it—much earlier than anyone expected

Harry Wharton was the first victim.

The captain of the Remove had expected Fatty Wynn's first ball to be a

But when the ball did come it seemed to be possessed of demons.

Wharton checked it with his bat, but only slightly: and the next instant his off-stump was performing revolutions.

"Well bowled. Fatty!" Fatty Wynn grinned, and braced himself up to deliver the next ball.

Nugent was the next batsman; and he expected a ball similar to the one which had compassed Wharton's downfall. Instead of which he received a slow leg-break, which took him so completely by surprise that he mis-timed it; and once again the umpire had to

And then—to the blank consternation of Greyfriars, and the delight of St. Jim's—Peter Todd walked in and walked out again in one movement, as medium-paced one, for Fatty took a "Trust old Bob to avoid that!" said very short run.

Fatty Wynn's third ball had made a terrible mess of Peter's wicket. "Bai Jove!" murmured Arthur Augus

Greyfriars bucked up, Fatty Wynn was always dangerous, but he did not have matters all his own way.

Bob Cherry, Vernon-Smith, and Mark Linley all got into double figures; and Bulstrode batted in a manner which suggested that it was a mistake to put him in last. The Remove were finally dismissed for 80, which gave St. Jim's a clear lead of 80. which gave St. Jim's a cour lead of 50 runs on the first innings.

"Now for tea!" said Fatty Wyun.
"My hat! I'm simply famished!"
"Never mind, old scoat!" said Kerr.
And Ever and Figgins each took their chum affectionately by the arm and propelled him towards the tea-tables.

The rest of the cricketers, with appetites abstrained by their attenuous papelines abstrained by their attenuous.
But a unraise was in store for the players. players.

When they reached the tables they Stretched upon the couch, snoring with a trumpet-like refrain, and with his hands clasped in the region of his waistcoat, was Billy Bunter of Greyfriars!

"My hat!" gasped Manners. (See Chapter 7.)

tus D'Arcy, in ecstasy. "That's simply summin, Wynn, deah boy!"
"It's won me a jolly good feed, any way!" said Fatty Wynn, with a triumph."
Cakes, pastries, stewed fruits, and other way!" said Fatty Wynn, with a trumping and grin at Figgins. On the your taking a wichere's no object ball you bow!," said from Merry. "If you can settle Vernor-Smith's hash with your fourth ball, we'll fall down and worship you!" But Vernon-Smith put a straight bat in front of the three remaining balls of the batting.

At the other end Bob Cherry was

Bob had been compelled to stand idly by while three of the Remove's best batsmen had been disposed of; and he was itching to have a go at the bowling himself.

Talbot was the bowler this time, and he was less deadly than Fatty Wynn. Bob Cherry smote the first ball hard and true to the boundary.

"Oh, good!" murmured Peter Todd, as he unstrapped his pads. "I was think-ing we were going to be all out for nix!"

Cakes, pastries, stewed fruits, and other comestibles had vanished as mysteriously as if the earth had opened and swallowed them up!

Fatty Wynn's jaw dropped.
"Gone!" he muttered. "My only

And the cricketers stared at each other blankly.

The same question was on the lips of each. What hidden hand had been at work to remove the feed?

THE SEVENTH CHAPTER.

A Lively Afternoon ! HIS beats the band!" said Tom

Merry.
"'Takes the cake' would be more correct," grunted Monty
. "Those fags must have been

Lowther. "Those helping themselves. THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 592.

A Grand School Story appears in Week's "GEM." Price 11d. Order Now.

"Wot!" said Arthur Augustus D'Arcy,
"My young bwothah helped to bwing the gwub along, an' I'm suah he wouldn't lay a fingain on it."
Wally D'Arcy and Joe Frayne of the Third came sprinting up as Guss spoke.
"Whal's happbend?" asked Wally breathlessly.

Tom Merry indicated the barren dishes

"We've got to entertain the Greyfrians fellows with crumbs!" he said. "Some-body's wolfed the grub."
"Do you kids know anything about it?" asked Mauners sternly.

it?" asked Manners stemly.

The two fags shock their heads.

"The grub was all screan when we left it," and Wally. "It was all haid out ready-mountains of it! It's been spirited away, or something," It's been something the state of the sta Figgins.

Rats 1" said Wally D'Arey. "We our bit by bringing the stuff slong. "We did cur bit by bringing the steff slong. If somebody chooses to come and pinch is that's your look out." Tom. Merry turned, rather a flushed face to the Greyfrans juniors.

"I'm awfully, sorry this has happened, you fellows," he said.
"Don't mench!" said Bob Cherry.
"Acquidents will happen, even in the best-ray of the said." The said bob Cherry.
"We've, got plenty of grab in the study," said Manners hopefully, "Let's, go dop and get it, Tomny," we've got plenty of grub study," said Manners hopefully, go along and get it, Tommy." Tom Merry's face brightened.

"I'd forgotten all about our own supplies," he said. "Sha'n't be long; you fellows."

And he accompanied Manners into the School House "It won't be such a fine spread as it was in the first place," said the captain of the Shell. "But there's a cake, and rolls, and strawberry-jam, and that's something."

But it was destined to be an afternoon of surprises.

When the two Shell fellows threw open When the two Shell fellows threw open the cupboard in Study No. 10, they found themselves in a smilar plight to the celebrated Mother Hubbard. The shelves, once stacked with good things, were now bare. "My hat!" and Manners. "We've been raided!"
"It almost makes you think that Billy Bunter was at St. Jim's again!" said Tom Merry "You remember Bunter's ittle ways! He always used to pinch anything he could lay his hands on." "What's to be done now!" asked Manners helplessly.

"We must go along and see if Grundy can help us out. He had a fat remittance from his Uncle Grundy this morning

Grundy of the Shell, however, did not prove to be a horn of plenty. He was discovered in his study, with Wilkins and Gunn. The trio looked decidedly wrathy.

"You fellows seen anything of my pie?" said Grundy. "It was a rabbit-pie—fresh from the tuckshop—and it's disappeared!

"We were going to have a high tea," rowled Wilkins. "And now it looke as we were going to have a many growled Wilkins. "And now it looks as I we shall have a jolly low one—in Hall! Damo Taggles has closed the tuckshop, and we can't get another pie."

"This study-raiding s getting a bit too thick," said Grundy. "If I find the fellow who scoffed my pie I—I'll burst bim!"

. Tom Merry nodded. He could sympathise with George Alfred Grundy in the present crisis.
"We're in the same boat," he said.

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 592.

"We not in a topping spread for the figure of the Owl of the Remove in mute Greyfriars fellows, and now there's wonder. Smears of jam were upon Billy Bunter's face, and he gave the impres-

"My hat!"
"The question is," said Manners,
"how are we going to raise a feed?
We can't carry on with the match without a tea interval. It's unthinkable!"

out a tea interval. It's unthinkable!"
"There may be something doing in Cardew's etudy," suggested Gunn. "I believe they laid in plenty of provisions for a feed this evening."
"Good!" said Tom Merry. "Come on, Manners. Cardew's certain to turn up trumps."

The food-hunters went along to passage.

Levison, Cardew, and Clive, the three occupants, could be counted upon to rally round at the critical moment, and to help the St. Jim's cricketers out of their awkward predicament.

Tom Merry threw open the door of the study. The next moment the two Shell fellows nearly fell down.

The rightful occupants of the study were not present. But, stretched upon the couch, snoring with a trumpet-like refrain, and with his hands clasped in the region of his waistcoat, was Billy Bunter of Greviriars!

hat!" "Mum - mum - my gasped Manners.

"Bunter!"
Tom Merry was too paralysed to act at once. He could only stere at the fat Read .

wonder.

Smears of jam were upon Billy Bunter's face, and he gave the impression of having stuffed himself until he was obliged to sink down, overcome.

Manuers advanced into the study and opened the cupboard.
Fortunately, Billy Bunter had hardly touched Cardow's supplies.

touched Cardow's supplies.
His orgy in the corner of the cricket-ground, followed by his raids on the Shell studies, had proved too much for him. Even Bunter, mighty feeder though ho studies, had prove Even Bunter, mig was, had his limits.

At that moment footsteps were audible in the passage, and Levison major, Cardew, and Cive appeared.

They stopped short on the threshold of the study in astonishment.

Cardew was the first to find his voice.
"Behold the Sleepin' Beauty?" he id "I thought we'd seen the fast of said "I absorbe we'd seen the last of our bure-like friend months ago. What's he dom' at $8. Jim's!"

"Give it up!" said Tem Merry. "It looks as if he's come over here without permission. Anyway, in $16 hast hour or to her's had three feeds, and you were going to be he fourth vietim. Look here, Gardew. Can you put off your foed till amobile time, gring fellows?"
"With pleasurs!" said Cardew. "I'm sure you re willim, 'siding' 'I'w yes, rather!" said Cive. "Same here!" said Levison. "Can't let the strangers within the gates go empty away.

empty away."
"What shall we do with this fat worm?" asked Manners, indicating Bunter, whose trumpeting snore fairly worn!" ana.

Bunter, whose trumpetus, Gardew chuckled.
"I think this is a golden eppertunity to provide a little Bank Heliday amusoment," he said genisdly. "We'll put our fat friend on a wheelbarroy, an' exhibit him to the crowd. Three shes a penny!"
"Bring him down to the quad," said Cardow, "while I commandeer the "Id hold of Billy
"such."

willing hands laid hold of Billy Bunter, and lifted him off the couch. But it was as much as the four sturdy juniors could do to carry the Owl of the Greyfriars Remove into the quad. They greaned and grunted beneath their burden

Bunter, although none too gently handled, still slept soundly. Even when he was bumped into the

Even when he was bumped into the wheelbarrow, and made secure with a length of rope, he failed to wake.

"Don't start the merry procession for a minute," said Cardew.
Ho went back to his study, and carefully inseribed a placard, which was duly and the procession for a minute, but the start of the start It ran as follows:

"GREAT BANK HOLIDAY ATTRACTION! BUNTER, THE TAME BOA-CONSTRICTOR!

THREE SHIES A PENNY!

HIT HIM ON THE DIAL AND GET TOPPING PASTIME FOR YOUNG

AND OLD! Bricks are taboo, but rotten eggs and ancient kippers are warmly welcomed!

PLEASE THROW SOMETHING!" "That ought to do the trick!" grinned ardew. "Full steam shead!"

Cardew. "Full steam shead!"

The wheelbarrow was pushed round to the cricket-ground. It lurched unsteadily from side to side, and the jolting move-ments caused the sleeper to stir uneasily. But he still slept.

Story of TOM MERRY & CO. at St. Jim's,

By MARTIN CLIFFORD. in

"THE GEM."

Out This Wednesday.

"Woman !" came in a snarling tone, apparently from Mr. Quelch. "Viper! Vixen!" The sour-looking lady shot bolt upright. "Eh? Wot was that?" she exclaimed. (See Chapter 9.)

There was a yell from St. Jim's and Greyfriars juniors alike when the barrow came to a halt in front of the pavilion.
"What the merry dickens—" gasped Monty Lowther.

"Bunter!" years
fellows as one man.
"My only aunt!"
"He's defied Quelchy!"
"He's defied Quelchy!"
"And he's scoiffed our tes, too!" said
"And he's scoiffed our tes, too!" said
"And he's scoiffed our tes, too!" said
"Merry." "There can't be any doubt

Tom Merry. "There can't be any wonder to be the carabout it. We ran dew's study!"
"The fat thief!"
"Pelt him!"

The crowd began to look round for auitable missiles. The invitation on the placard was too good to be ignored.

The next moment Billy Bunter won-dered dazedly if Bedlam had broken loose.

He awoke to find himself cramped in a wheelbarrow, surrounded by a hostile

Before he could fully account for his present plight a shower of eggs burst and spattered all over him.

"Yoocoop!"

Those eggs were not by any manner of means new-laid. They resembled, in fact, Macanlays "Lays of Ancient Rome."

The fags of the Third had been keeping shem in reserve for an occasion such as this; and they entered into the spirit of the thing with great test.

"Go it!"

"Give him heave!"

From far and near fellows trooped up to join in the fun.

Had Billy Bunter been an effigy of the ex-Kaiser he could not have met with such a warm reception "Yow! Chuck it! S hurt!" spluttered Bunter. Stoppit! I'm you beasts

you beasts!"
But the pelters did not desist until lack of ammunition compelled them to do to the pelters and when state until pelters and when st last Harry Wharton stepped forward to untie the victim's bonds, the Owl of the Remove was in a terrible state. He could not have been worse if he had just emerged from a very slimy and unsavoury duckpond. "Ow! Traitors!" groaned Bunter, blinking at the grinning faces of the Grevfriars juniors. "Why didn't you Greyfriars juniors. back me up against those rotters?

"You deserved every bit of what you got." said Peter Todd, "Now, hustle back to Greyfrians, unless you want to be fired out of the school in disgrace! You heard what Quelchy said this morning. You were flatly forbidden to come over here. If Quelchy finds out where you've been you'll be sent packing!" "Oh, really, Todd——"

"You fat young toad!" said Wharton.
"You're a disgrace to the Remove!
Fancy coming to a rival school to steal!" "I-I say, that's an ugly word, Whar-

"Go it!"
"Give him bears!"
"Give him bears!"
"Ha, hi, ha!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Ha him, ha!"
"Ha him and I'm quite prepared to pay for them?"

"W-w-what?" gasped Wharton. Billy Bunter, still seated in the wheel Billy Bunter, still ceated in the wheel-barrow, plunged a fat and sticky hand into his pocket, and produced four currency notes and some small change. "Great jumping crackers!" gasped Bob Cherry. "Have you been rifling the from from one of my titled relations I'm willing to make good any financial losses I've caused to my old pale at St. I'm jiggered!" murmured

"Well, I'm Frank Nugent.

Frank Nugent. "I've had about a quid's worth of grub altogether," Bunter went on. "Here you are, Tom Merry!" And the lat junior extended a pound note to the astonished captain of the Shell.

Shell.

"I'll take it," said Tom Merry, "and keep it by me. 'It's bound to be claimed sooner or later by the person whose desk you're burgled!"

"Oh, really, you know—"
"Now, look here, Bunter," said Whar-

"Now, fook here, Bunter," said Wharton sternly, "you'd better cut back to Greyfriars at once, or there'll be ructions! If you go back now there's just a chance that you may get in before Guelchy spots your absence."

"I'm staying here!" said Bunter obstantely. "I'm not going to bave-iny Bank Holiday nipped in the bud for anyhold! Who grass a ran for an old ween.

body! Who cares a rap for an old woman like Quelchy, anyway?"

Scarcely were the words out of Bunter's mouth, when the crowd of cricketers THE MAGNET LIBBARY.—No. 592.

THE BEST 40. LIBRARY THE "BOYS' FRIEND" 40. LIBRARY. NOW ON 10

suddenly parted, leaving a pathway down its D'Arcy. "I consident that Buntah is booked for a yewy warm time, deah And through this pathway, stern of eye and tight of lip, strode a familiar figure. Bunter's eyes nearly bulged out of their enstrate For the intruder was Mr. Quelch!

THE EIGHTH CHAPTER. 'Aomeward Bound !

"BUNTER!" the Remove master's voice fell upon Bunter's ear like a clap of thunder.

"What are you doing here? And how dare you place yourself in such a pre-posterous position! Remove yourself from that—that objectionable vehicle at barrow. It turned turtle as he did so, and Buater landed at Mr. Quelch's feet like a floundering fish. "Ha, ha, ha! snapped Mr. Quelch.

Billy Bunter got down from the wheel-

"This is no laughing matter, my boys! Get to your feet. Bunter!"

Yow-ow-ow

Billy Bunter struggled to his feet, and stood blinking at Mr. Quelch. His knees were fairly knocking His knees were tally together. He was in a tight corner; and it was difficult to see a way out.

Bunter," said Mr. I tones, "I expressly This morning, Quelch, in measured tones, guestn, in measured tones, "I expressly forbade your to leave the precincts of Grayfriars! I gave you an imposition to write, and directed you to remain in the Form-room. You have wantonly and brazenly defied mo!"
"Oh crumbs!"

Oh crumbs "I understand from Gosling that you "I understand from Gosling that you escaped by means of a tick," continued Mr. Quelch. "You have been guilty of the most outrageous conduct, Bunter! What have you to say for yourself?" Billy Bunter moistened his dry lips. "I—I was in the Form-toom, sir, writing my lines like a dutful pupil, when I got an urgent telegram from Wharton..."

Wharton What ?"

"A fearfully urgent telegram, sir! It aid, 'Come at once. We are getting said, 'Come at once. W badly licked by St. Jim's.' "Bless my soul!"

"You fat young fraud—" exclaimed Harry Wharton angrily. Billy Bunter clutched at his excuse like a drowning man at a straw.

"That's how it was, sir," he said.
"Of course, I couldn't leave the Remove in the lurch, so I hurried over to St. Jim's without a moment's delay. Under those circumstances, sir, I hope you won't punish me.

punish me."
Bunter's hope was ill-founded.
"You are a most deceifful and untruthful boy, Bunter! You say that truting boy, Bunter: xou say that Wharton sent you a telegram?"

"Yes, sir."
"It is impossible to send telegrams on a Bank Holiday!" said Mr. Quelch a Dana drily.

"M-m-my hat!"
"You will return to Greyfriars at once, in my custody." rumbled the Formmaster. "I will consider how best to

"Ow! Kik-kik-can't you wait till the match is over, sir!" stammered Bunter. "The Remove are relying on me to pull the game out of the fire, sir!"
"You will come with me!" rasped Mr.

Quelch.

His hand descended upon Billy Bun-ter's s¹ pulder, and the Owl of the Re-move, after a wild glance round, was marched off the cricket-ground.

"Bai Jove!" murmured Arthur Augus-THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 592.

is boosed to boys!"
"There's not much doubt about that,"
"There's Wharton. "I wouldn't be said Harry Wharton. "I wouldn't be in Bunter's shoes for a whole term's cket-money! The rest of the juniors shared Whar-

ton's view

Mr. Quelch was extremely angry. His Bank Holiday had been entirely spoilt. In the middle of his game of golf with Mr. Prout he had been informed by Gosling that Bunter had broken bounds. Another master might have carried on Another master might have carried on with his golf, and postponed Billy Bunter's hour of reckoning.

Not so Mr. Quelch. Always a keen disciplinarian, he meant to bring Bunter back into the strait and narrow path with all appeed.

After apologising briefly to Mr. Prout, he had taken the train at Friardale, and had hurried to St. Jim's to expedite the return of the wanderer.

It was a very breathless Bunter that arrived at Rylcombe Station with Mr. Quelch-

"What time is the next train to Court-field Junction?" inquired the Remove-master of the sleepy-looking porter.

"Not till 5.30, sir. You've got an hour and a 'arf

Billy Bunter blinked at Mr. Quelch. mit wouldn't be a bad idea, sir," he said, "to fill in the time at the bun-shop. I—I've had no tea, sir," added Bunter, hastily, as Mr. Quelch's gimlet eyes were turned upon him.

The Remove-master frowned. "It would be a much better idea, Bun-ter," he said, "if you spent the next half-hour in a bath. Come with me!" A taxi was crawling along the village street. Mr. Quelch hailed it.

"Are there any public baths here-abouts?" he inquired of the driver. "Yessir! Over at Wayland, air.

"Yessir! Over at Wayland, air. Thinking of taking your usual Bank Holiday splash, sir!"
The taximan was trying to be genial, but the humour of the situation was quite but the humour of the situation was quite lost upon Mr. Quelch. "Do not be impertinent, my man!" he said. "Take us to Wayland at once!" A refusal hovered on the man's lips. But the next moment a curious grin spread over his features. He meant to give Mr. Quelch a good run for his money.

"Jump in, sir!" he said.
Mr. Quelch stepped into the taxi, and Bunter followed.

The roads were not rough; but, judg-ing by the antics of that taxi, Mr. Quelch imagined he was taking a trip over the Rocky Mountains

The vehicle jolted and bumped terribly. On rounding a corner Billy Bunter was hurled bodily into the unwilling arms of the Form-master.

"Oh!" gasped Mr. Quelch, as the fat junior cannoned into him.

"Yaroooop!" roared Bunter. "The—the man's drunk, sir! May I get out and walk!"

"You."!! June 19

"You will do nothing of the kind, Bunter! Resume your seat at once!" Billy Bunter did so, only to be shot forward again the next instant He pitched across the taxi, and clasped Mr. Quelch lovingly round the neck.

"Ow! Help! Save me, sir! Help!

fellow's potty With great difficulty Mr. Quelch divested himself of Bunter's weighty

Then he thrust his head out of the window. "Pray. drive more carefully !" "You are causing me acute shouted. discomfort !"

driver grinned, and forged garine The merrily ahead. He meant to get his own back-and he succeeded!

Bump, bump! The taxi jolted and swayed in a most alarming manner. It was a nightmare journey to the unhappy couple inside.

When the vehicle at last slowed up outside the public baths, Mr. Queich draw a deep does be the state of the country of the co outside the public baths, Mr. Queich drew a deep, deep breath of relief. He was thankful to think there were no

"You are a very reckless and un-principled man!" he said to the taxidriver

"Yessir! Certingly, sir! Seven and x, please!" Mr. Quelch handed over the fare, and the taxi rolled away.

Billy Bunter turned to the Formmaster with a look of appeal.

"Mummum-may I postpone my bath until we get back to Greyfriars, sin?". For answer, Mr. Quelch grasped the fat junior by the arm and led him into the baths.

He gave the attendant instructions—likewise a tip—and Billy Bunter was taken, willy-nilly, to his doom. There were few things Bunter dreaded so much as a bath.

The attendant did his work thoroughly. He paved the way with a hard scrub-bing-brush, and the odour of bad eggs. and unsavoury kippers was gradually dispersed.

Then Bunter was plunged into an icycold bath, and he gurgled and spluttered as the water closed over his head.

But there was no help for it.

as he was close to be the first and the was close of the first and the f

waiting for him

waiting for him.

"I am pleased to note an improvement in your appearance, Bunter," said the Remove-master, with grim satisfaction.
"There is a train leaving Wayland in an hour. Meanwhile, we will have tac."
Billy Bunter brightened up.
Was it possible that he had misjudged
Mr. Quelch?
It certainly looked like it

It certainly looked like it.

It certainly sooked like it.

The fat junior pictured himself aitting down to a table laden with good things.
Some little time had elapsed since his orgy at St. Jim's, and be felt quite equal to another feed of large dimensions.

Mr. Quelch led the way into a small one of the few establishments tea-shop its kind which was open on Bank

Holiday.

The proprietor of the shop came forward.
"Good-afternoon, sir! What can I get for you and your son?"
"Mum-mum-my son?" stattered Mr.

Quelch.

The proprietor nodded.

"Is he not your bonnie, bouncing boy?" he asked, indicating Billy Bunter.
Mr. Quelch shuddered.

"He is not—thank goodness!" he muttered. Your nephew, perhaps?" ventured the chatty proprietor.

"We are master and pupil," said Mr.
Quelch coldly. "Pray bring two small cups of tea and half a buttered scone."

"Very good, sir!"

The proprietor brought the tea, like-wise the half scone, complete with mar-

Bunter. Bunter.
"Be silent, Bunter! Drink your tea!" Billy Bunter slowly sipped his tea, and cast longing eyes at the dishes of pastry

on the counter.

Mr. Quelch picked up a newspaper, and started to read.

Bunter saw that the Remove-master was not prepared to treat him to any-thing more substantial than a cup of weak

But the fat junior remembered that he had money in his pocket. Whilst Mr. Quelch was engrossed in the paper, Bunter caught the eye of the proprietor. Bring me a dish of those fancy tries!" he whispered, almost inpastries !

audibly. The proprietor obeyed.

Billy Bunter was just about to start on a large chocolate macaroon when Mr Quelch looked up sharply from his paper.

"Bunter!"

"Oh crumbs!"

"Oh crumbs!"
"Remove that dish of indigestible compounds at once!"
"Yes, sir! Certainly, sir!"
And Billy Bunter took a huge bite out of the chocolate macaroon.
Mr. Quelch started up in anger.
"Bow! Bunter! How dars you dis-

"Boy! Bunter! How dare you dis-obey me!" Billy Bunter blinked reproachfully across the table.

across the table.

"You—you told me to remove those things, sir!" he said. "I was just making a start."

"You will replace that dish on the counter at once !

Ye-e-es, sir !

Billy Bunter placed the tempting dish out of range.

out of range.

He began to realise that he would have had a much happier Bank Holiday writing lines in the Form-room at Grey-friars, 'To be tantalised in this way was maddening.

Mr. Quelch finished his newspaper at leisure, while Billy Bunter eat and writhed.

Then, glancing at his watch, the Renove-master rose.

"Come, Bunter!" he said.

For an instant Bunter entertained a fleeting thought of making good his escape.

He was wondering whether to make a sudden bolt for freedom when Mr. Quelch, interpreting his thoughts, placed an iron grip on his shoulder.
"Do not dare to elude me, Bunter!"

he said sternly.

And the Remove-master stalked out of the tea-shop.

Billy Bunter-owing to circumstances panied him.

THE NINTH CHAPTER. Bunter's Revenge!

URRY up, there!" Take your seats, please!" The train was in at Wayland Station

Mr. Quelch, with a tenacious grip on Billy Bunter's arm, looked out for an empty carriage. He was ur

He was unlucky. Bank Holiday crowds reduce empty carriages to a minimum.

There was, in fact, very little standing

Just as the train was starting Mr. Quelch threw open the door of a third-class smoking compartment and entered, dragging Billy Bunter in after him.

There were a dozen young fellows in the carriage most of them in a state of Some were singing. Quelch was amazed to learn from the lips other occupants of the carriage.

Mr. Quelch started operations on the one.

"May I order my whack, sir?" asked man, musically inclined, was proclaiming man, musically inclined, was proclaiming to the world at large that his wife had gone to the country. Yet another youth requested Mr. Quelch to give him his smile, the lovelight in his eyes.

"Bless my soul!" gasped Mr. Quelch.

The carriage was hazy with the fumes of tobacco-smoke.

In one corner sat a very sour-looking lady of uncertain years. She frowned as her glance alighted on Mr. Quelch.
"Let that kid alone, carn't yer? He ain't done you no 'arm!" ain't done you no 'ai Mr. Quelch started.

Mr. Quelch started.

"Are you addresing me, madam?"

"'Course I am! I'm surprised at yer, bullyin' a small child like that! You'll make 'is glasses fall off in a minute. You orter be ashamed of yerself!"

Mr. Quelch bit his lip with annoyance. He did not wish to enter upon a long explanation of Bunter's misconduct. This woman would not understand.

It was at this moment that Billy Bunter hit upon a sudden idea.

MAGNIFICENT NEW

Long, Complete Stories of HARRY WHARTON & CO.

GREYFRIARS

SCHOOL are now appearing in

THE PENNY POPULAR

(War Condition Price 11d.) Order YOUR Copy NOW!

He was furious with Mr. Quelch—not only because he had been dragged away from St. Jim's, but because the tea in Wayland had turned out to be a farce. Bunter saw an opportunity of getting his own back by means of ventriloquism. He knew that he would have to be very careful; for there would be short shrift for him if Mr. Quelch tumbled to the little game.

"Woman!" came in a snarling tone—apparently from Mr. Quelch. "Viper!

Vixen!"

The sour-looking lady shot boit upright.
"Eh? What was that?" she exclaimed.
"Insolent hussy! Mind your own busi-

"My eye!"

The meensed old lady flourished a bony fix under Mr. Quelch's nose.
"'Ow dare yer!" she shouted. "'Ow dare yer sy aich things to a lidy!"
Mr. Quelch staggered.
"My good woman, I—I can assure you
—I wasn't—I didn't—" he stammered.
"If my 'unbin's was '2002 he'd he'd. The incensed old lady flourished a bony

"If my 'usbing was 'ere, he'd bash yer ugly fice in!"

There was a roar of laughter from the

Mr. Quelch nearly collapsed. ar. Queien nearly collapsed.
"Oh dea! I.-I."
"You're a Bawl-shevist, that's wof you are!" said the lady in the corner.
"A-bullyin' of that young kid, as ever was! Nice young kid he is, too! He ain't a boot-ficed clown; like you!"
"Madam! I.-"

"Yah! Go an' boil yer 'ead!"
Mr. Quelch did not go and boil his ead. Instead, he leaned heavily on the hond head. Instead, it strap, gasping.

"Come 'ere, my little man!" said the woman, addressing Billy Bunter.
"There's room on my lsp, if yer like,"
"I—I'd rather stand, thanks!" said

Bunter hastily.

"Oh, orleight! Wot's the trouble?

'As he bin ill-treatin' of yer?"

"N-n-not exactly," stammered Bunter,

Nn-not exactly, stammered Bunter, with a dubious glance at Mr. Quelch, "I-T'm peckish, ma'am, that's all. I only had a light snack for lunch; and I've had no tea."
"Bless 'is 'eart! 'Ere, pitch into these buns !" So saying, Billy Bunter's Good Samaritan produced a large paper bag, from which the fat junior helped himself liberally Mr. Quelch was too much overcome to interfere Billy Bunter disposed of the buns with Billy Bunter unposes of lightning speed.

"Bless yer!" said the kind-hearted lady. "I sin't 'ad sich a treat since I fed lady. "I sin't 'ad sich a treat since I fed lady. "I aim't 'ad sich a treat since I fed the sea-lions at the Zoo!" mumbled Bunter. "I feel better already." "That's the style! If that old geyser" —the woman pointed a very faded parasol at Mr. Quelch—"if he tries any of 'is tricks on yet, let me know. You'll find me in the pawnshop queue at Court-field any Monday mornin'." "Right you are, ma'am!" Bunter felt that he was not having such a bad time, after all. such a bad time, after all.

The chopper would come down when he got to Greyfriars, he knew. Meanwhile, he meant to enjoy himself.

The train rushed on through the pleasant countryside; and the voices of the holiday-makers broke out afresh. "There's a tramp, tramp, tramp along here's a sound of music drawin' There's

Mr. Quelch devoutly wished that the music, instead of drawing near, would fade away. His ear-drums seemed in imminent danger of bursting.

"Why don't yer take that sour look off yer mug?" demanded the woman in the corner, at length. "It's 'oliday time, and everybody's 'appy! Give us a song, old 'atchet-fice!"

song, old 'atchet-fice!"
"Yus, give us a song!" chorused the hilarious occupants of the carriage. Mr. Quelch frowned.

"I regard you as an unrefined and dis-orderly rabble!" he exclaimed.

"Oh, do yer?" growled one of the youths. Then take that:

Mr. Quelch took it. It was a playful thump on the head which smashed his golfing-cap down over his cyes.

"You-you disgraceful ruffian! I have a good mind to pull the communication cord !" "If you do," said the festive youth, "there won't be much of yer left by the time the guard gets 'ere!"

The Remove-master quailed before the ominous tones of the speaker.

"Oh dear!" he murmured. "This-

this is intolerable!

That journey was like a bad dream to Mr. Quelch. The din which went on around him was deafening. Chorus after chorus burst from the lips of the irrepressible holiday-makers.

The Magner Library.—No. 592.

Over in the corner Billy Bunter was engaged in telling his lady benefactor all about his titled relations. Mr. Queich caught the word "postal-order" from time to time.

Ah! Courtfield at last!

With a jarring of the brakes, the train rumbled to a standstill

Mr. Quelch was quite limp as he staggered on to the platform.

"Bless my soul!" he gasped. "I shall never travel by train on a Bank Holiday again—nev. 1."

again—nev.rr"
"Good-bye, Bluebell!" sang out the lady in the corner. "An' don't let me catch yer up to none of yer bullyin' tricks agen!" "He, he, he!" cackled Billy Bunter. Mr. Quelch spun round upon the fat junior "How dare you snigger at the epithets of that—that offensive female!" he exclaimed. "Come away at once, Bunter!"

And Mr. Quelch enforced his words by fairly dragging the Owl of the Remove on to the other platform, where the Friar-dale train was waiting.

The grin faded from Billy Bunter's

He realised that the end of the adventure icomed very near.

Mr. Quelch was in a towering rage, and he would not be likely to spare the rod.

The train rumbled on its way, and a hoarse refrain from one of its crowded carriages Iollowed Mr. Quelch and Billy ture loomed very near. Bunter as they went.

"There's a tramp, tramp, tramp along the 'ighway!

There's a sound of music drawin' near!"

With something like a shiver Billy Bunter reflected that the "music" was drawing near much too quickly for his personal comfort!

THE TENTH CHAPTER. The Fellows Who Won!

THILST Billy Bunter was being led to the slaughter, as it were, the Greyfriars Eleven were having a similar experience at St. Jim's.

The game had gone against them. After the tea interval, at which Cardew's supplies were duly requisitioned, St. Jim's had started upon their second innings. And it had seemed to the Greyfriars juniors that they would never finish. Tom Merry and Talbot had stayed in for an hour, and had given an exhibi-tion of fireworks.

Then George Figgins, determined to show that the cricketing talent of St. Jim's was not confined to the School House, had gone in and made merry, rat-tling up 35 before a fast ball from Hurrce Singh uprooted his off-stump.

As if this were not enough, Redern proceeded to pile Pelien on Ossa by scoring four boundaries in one over. The Saints were irresistible. They piled up runs at an amazing rate, and the second innings closed—the day was far spent by this time—for the magnificent total of 199. Harry Wharton & Co. wanted 250 to

It was a tremendous task. It was nextdoor to impossible.

Even if the Remove made hay of Fatty Wynn's bowling—and very few batsmen ever succeeded in doing that—it was doubtful whether the light would hold out Although the match had started early, there had been many delays, for which Billy Bunter had been chiefly responsi-

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 592.

"Two hundred and fifty!" murmured Bob Cherry. "Shades of Jack Hobbs! Where are we going to get that little lot from?"

"Of course, we haven't an earthly! said Bulstrode. "Let's make the secon "Let's make the second ings a sort of pantomime Wharton turned almost fiercely upon the speaker.

"We're not going to play the giddy oat, if that's what you mean," he said. We're almost certain to lose; but we're going to make the margin as narrow as possible! Every fellow's got to put his beef into it!"

"Hear, hear!" said Johnny Bull. "We shall go under, but we'll show 'we've still got a kick left in us!" It was in this spirit that Greyfriars started on their second innings.

They were tired and leg-weary. They fielded for three hours beneath a blazing sun. They had brought all their energies to bear on dismissing the St. Jim's batsmen. And now that their own rim to bat had come they were ill-equipped for the struggle.

When Harry Wharton and Frank Nugent walked out to the wickets, there was a strange lack of enthusiasm on the part of the spectators .. Many of the fellows had already left the ground, deeming the match as good as won for St. Jim's. Only a few re-mained, curious to see how Greyfriars would shape in their uphill task. Wharton opened strongly.

There were no fancy strokes, no beautiful leg-drives or stylish cuts.

Wharton's batting was of the rustic order. He hit hard and clean. When allowed to do so he hit often.

marrured Bob Cherry, from the pavilion steps. "He's a fixure this time. Fatty Wynn's tearing his hair already." "Harry's got his back to the wall!"

"Nugent can't settle down;" said Peter Todd, "Look at that! Thought his number was up that time!"

Frank Nugent had just scraped feebly at a slow ball from Fatty Wynn, and mid-wicket had just failed to get to the ball in time. It was not until the fifty had been housted that the St. Jim's fellows began to tell each other that this sort of thing wouldn't do.

But, although they were rather per-turbed by Wharton's hurricane batting, they were by no means anxious. There could only be one result, they reflected a St. Jim's victory.

The score had leapt up to 85 when Frank Nugent was caught at the wicket. And Harry Wharton had made 60 of Frank Nugent grinned rather breath-lessly as he passed Bob Cherry, who was going in to take his place.

"They're not getting so much ginger into their bowling as they were before," he said. "Go for the stuff baldheaded. he said. "Trust your uncle !" chuckled Bob

But for quite a long time he had nothing to do.

Harry Wharton was still going strong. He had a happy knack of scoring singles off the last ball of each over, thereby retaining the bowling.

Bob Cherry watched his chum in silent admiration.

Wharton was always at his best when playing an uphill game.

If the Remove had wanted a thousand to win he would never have given up The hundred runs went up on the tele graph board, and although the sun was beginning to sink in the west. Harry beginning to sink in the west. Harry Wharton saw that Greyfriars still had a faint chance of saving the game

That faint chance grew into something more tangible as the game advanced The hundred and fifty was reached with only one wicket down.

And presently a tremendous burst of cheering went up from the pavilion. Harry Wharton looked round dazedly

He could not understand it at first; and then it dawned on him that he had reached his century. Bai Jove!" murmured Arthur

Augustus D'Arcy, panting with his exer-tions in the field. "These beggahs are goin' to take some shiftin', aftah all!" "Oh dear! I-I'm done!" gasped

Fatty Wynn. His bowling had lost its sting. After a rest he would probably come back like a giant refreshed. In the meantime, a change-bowler was necessary Tom Merry himself took the ball, and he tried all he knew to break through Harry Wharton's defence. But this was Wharton's day. He was touching the top of his form, and nothing could move him. Bob Cherry backed his leader up loyally. Bob was a lusty hitter, and although Wharton did the lion's share of the batting, quite a respectable score stood to Bob Cherry's credit when he was at length disposed of by a fast ball from the captain of the Shell. A hundred and eighty for two!" said

Bulstrode: "My hat! I wonder if we can possibly pull it off?" A good many other fellows were won-dering, too. But their wonderment turned to dismay when they realised that "This is where the G. L. Jessop touch will come in useful!" observed Squiff. "Play up, Toddy!"

Play up, Toddy!"
Peter Todd ran out to the wickets. He ran, because every moment was precious

The crowd, which had dwindled away, returned in full force when they heard of the Remove's obstinate refusal to ac-

Some lively batting followed, Peter Todd did most of it, for Wharton was far spent now

The captain of the Remove had played a great game with commendable forl tude. But there was a limit to all thing and Wharton was all but "whacked But there was a limit to all things, The perspiration was streaming down his face, and he was almost sobbing for face, breath. Peter Todd, by far the fresher of the two, hit out at anything and everything. He knew that, if his wicket fell, there were others to take up the running.

The second hundred was hoisted amid loud applause. "This is weally a most wemarkable display!" said Arthur Augustus. "I thought we'd won the match, deah

"Hark at him!" said Monty Lowther.

"He thought! When people like Gussy "Ha, ha, ha!"
"Weally, Lowthah—"
"Shurrup! Let's shift these beggars!

But the beggars refused to be shifted.
Wharton did little scoring now; but Peter Todd drove delightfully.

It was not until the score stood at two hundred and thirty that Peter was caught in the long-field.

Mark Linley came in next.

The Lancashire lad hit three boundaries in succession, and then got out.

But he had played his part in the lightning performance; and when lightning performance; and when Vernon-Smith followed on, Greyfrians were confident of victory. It took Vernon Smith but a fer minutes to knock off the remaining runs

The winning hit was a beauty. . The ball landed with a bump and a clatter !

on the pavilion steps.
"Amazin'!" murmured Arthur Augustus, almost staggering from the field, "I wegarded it as uttahly impwobable that Greyfwiahs could win But it was so !

The Friars, with six wickets in hand, had not only won, but won handsomely. Harry Wharton's score was a hundred and forty-not out. Small wonder that the St. Jim's fellows assisted the Friars to carry the captain of the Remove back to the pavilion.

Seldom had Harry Wharton & Co. succeeded in routing their opponents by such a big margin. It was not easy for any visiting side to win against St. Jim's. visiting side to win against St. Jim's. But the Friars had overcome all ob-stacles, and won; and Harry Wharton's great score was likely to stand as a record for the season.

The Saints took their defeat like true sportsmen, and a very merry crowd Grevfriars juniors farewell Greyfriars juniors farewell.

"We'll see if we can't lower your giddy colours when we come offers."

"Yaas, wathah!"

"You'll have all your work cut out," said Harry Wharton, with a smile.
"So-long, you fellows! It's been a ripping day!"

Elevon Elevon were

of a Bank Holiday crush, they felt that | roughs, had practised a little sleight-ofthey had deserved well of their country.

Billy Bunter rolled up to the cricketers as they came into the Close.
"Yow-ow-ow-ow-ow!" he mumbled

"Is that a conundrum?" grinned Bob Wow!

I've been new a yelped Bünter. couple of canes on me !" "Ha, ha, ha!"
"It's no loke." said the Owl of the Remove, blinking round at the grinning Removites. "I've had it hot, I can tell you! And I'm jolly hungry!"

"You fellows would make me the guest of honour in Study No. 1 if you had a shred of sympathy for me!" said Bunter. "Yes; but we haven't, you see!" said Wharton. "You're a stupid young ass, and you're jolly lucky not to be sacked from the school!"

"Oh, really, you know! I—I say— But the cricketers were gone.

Billy Bunter rolled away disconsolately, but he cheered himself with the reflection that there was a goodly portion of Loder's fiver still unexpended.

On groping in his pocket, however, Bunter made the alarming discovery that the pocket-book was missing. He groaned aloud.

Either the sour-faced lady in the rail-hand trick, and Bunter's ill-gotten game had been transferred to somebody else's pocket.

Loder of the Sixth showed considerable traces of anxiety during the next few

He was concerned for the fate of his

He was concerned for the late of his pocket-book.

Not that Loder minded losing the money a great deal, though that was bad enough; but he dreaded that the pocketenough; but he dreaded that the pocket-book might have found its way into the hands of the Head, or one of the masters. That note from Jerry Hawke, if it came to light, would undoubtedly result in Loder's expulsion from the school.

With all his cunning, he would find it difficult to explain away.

For a time the rascally prefect suffered intolerable suspense. But he was never called to judgment, and his anxiety ceased at length. But Loder failed to unravel the mystery of the missing pocket-book. Certainly his suspicions never rested upon William George Bunter. Had they done so, there would have been a yet more terrible climax to Billy Bunter's Half-Holiday ! (DON'T MISS "BUNTER THE BOLSHEVIK!" - next Monday's grand complete story of Harry And as the Remove Eleven were Either the sour-faced lady in the rail grand complete story of Harry whirled back to Greyfriars in the thick way-carriage, or one of the merry making Wharton & Co., by Frank Richards.)

Johnny Goggs comes to Rylcombe Grammar School from Franklingham with his chuma Trickett, Bloom Franklingham with his chuma Trickett, Bloom Franklingham with his chuma proposal publish was proposed to the proposal proposal publish with the proposal publish of Grammarians to St. Jim'a, and accomplishes one of the most daring night raids ever pernetrated:

(Now read on.)

On the Roof!

S there seemed no possibility of get-A ting in by the usual way, all were ready to try this plan. They were fairly tired out by this time, and to most of them the roof adventure made no most of them the roof adventure made no great appeal as an adventure. But it had its points as a likely way to bed. An inspection of the tree did not make their prospects look more hopeful. The roof at the back was lower than in front, and their prospects look more hopful. The roof at the back was lower than 'in front, and the higher branches of the tree rose well branches and the roof was too great to allow of stepping from them to it, and to jump was out of the question. Anxious as attain that end by making a hole in the roof and crashing through it. "No go!" said Gordon Gay. "Looks pretty hopeless," agreed Frank Monk.

Monk.
"A giddy frost. And, my word, I am sleepy!" growled Harry Wootton.
"Wait a moment, duffers! Goggles is thinking," said Bags.
Bags was as tired as anyone else, but he was not too tired to retain his faith in

"Have I not seen a snort inducer somewhere about?" asked Gozga.
"Yea; I dare say you have," replied Jack Wootton. "You seem to see everything. There is one, snyway, and I fancy we can get at it, for the tool-shed isn't often locked, it's supposed to be kept there. and fetch it, Harry."
"Run and fetch it yourself, swanker!"

and fetch it, Harry."
"Run and fetch it yourself, swanker!"
snorted Woodon minor.
Lane and Mont Blanc fetched the ladder
"Yes, I think it is long enough," said

Goggs.
"Rats! It doesn't reach half-way," Morgan

"Half-way from where to where?" Goggs inquired blandly. "From the ground to the roof, of course, fathead !

"But it is not necessary that it should.

My notion is that it will reach from the upper branches to the roof—see?"

It was a very simple solution of the

It was a very simple solution of the problem, but it had not occurred to anyone problem, but it had not occurred to anywebt Goggs.

Now the Goggs.

Now the Goggs.

Now there is warning up the tree.

"Don't all come right up to the top, you idoles!" rapped out Gay. "The ladder will have to be passed sp., you and it was found easy to make with it a kind of bridge from the upper branches to the roof.

The Goggs of the Goggs of the control of the roof of the control of the roof of the control of the roof.

The Goggs of the Goggs of the control of the roof of the control of the roof of the control of the roof of

"The ladder will look above a bit suspish in the morning, you know," said Carboy. "It can be removed before anyone is down," replied Goggs.

They crept along the lower part of the roof.

The main building was a storey higher than the annexe, which contained the kitchen and domestic offices, above which they now were At first the getting from the lower roof to the higher one looked like another problem, but Goggs again found an easy solution to it. A rain-pipe, running down from the upper roof, passed the edge of one side of the lower roof, passed the edge of one side of the lower one, and it seemed quite firm, Again Gordon Gay went first, and reached the upper part of the roof without difficulty. One by one Carboy, Mont Blanc, Nicky O'Domell, Harry Wootton, Tricks, Wagtall, Morgan, Donaldson, Lane, and Jack Wootton all followed him.

There remained on the lower roof only Frank Monk, Bags, and Goggs. Wootton major's weight made the pipe sag out a bit. It was not that he was heavier than two or three of the others; but the additional strain, that each made greater, was telling.

was teining.
"Is it going to bear us?" asked Bags.
Gordon Gay looked over the edge of the upper root, lying along the slates to do so.
"Don't try it if there's any doubt about that," he said warningly. "If we can get in, one of us can come down and open the window for you fellows."

window for you fellows."

"Oh, I'm going up," replied Monk. "The thing will hold all right. It's only one stanckion that some.

Goggles," raid Bags. "He's the heaviest of the three."

"You can both go before me if you like,"

"You can both go before to the content to be lank Monk said. "I'm quite content to be last.

"Go on, Bags!" said Goggs.

Bags went up nimbly. The pipe sagged just a little more.

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 592.

"Here goes!" said Monk, and he began the "Oh. look out!" cried Wootton major.

"On, look out." cried Wootton major.

It was too late. Monk was two yards above the lower roof when the pipe gave.
He dropped, sprawling backwards. Goggs anatched at him as he fell, and broke the force of his fall by falling under him.

These peering from shove aw in the most neighb the two roll down the roof a yard or two. One of them clutched at the edge of it, and arrested their progress for a momen. But they were too bodly mixed up together to see just what they were doing, and next cluding they disposed over the edge, still clinging. The companion of the companion of the "Oh exempts." Those peering from above saw in the moon-light the two roll down the roof a yard or

"Oh crumbs!" gasped Wootton minor.

Splash! "Yooop!"

"They've fallen into the water-butt!"

It was even so. And it was well for Goggs and Monk that so it should be.

The lid of the big butt below happened to be off, which was fortunate. And the two came down in such a manner that they fell right inside it, which was also fortunate. right inside it, which was also fortunate. For if either had struck the edge of the butt his back might have been broken.

What was not so fortunate was the condition of the water inside the butt. Rain-water long stored is apt to grow very smelly indeed. This had been long in the butt, and was to have been run off the next day in order that the vessel might be cleaned ont

"Gurrrigggg!" gasped Goggs and Monk in unison, as they came up out of the vite liquid or, rather, as their heads appeared

"Are you all right?" sounded a somewhat tremulous voice from above. "All right be hanged!" We've been jolly well drowned, and now we're being jolly well poisoned!" replied Frank Monk hothy.

Passoned: replied Frank Monk hotly.

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"If you silly asses think it's funny—"
"Are you hurt?" demanded Gay from the roof.

"Not exactly uit, but"Not exactly uit, but"Then it is finity—biesed funny!"
"Then it is finity—biesed funny!"
"I quite agree with you, Joyful," said Gogzi. "But I am not greedy. I should like the said of the finity of the said of me!
"I wish the whole giddy crew of them were!" mapped Monk.
"That is truly kind of you, Monkey!" said
"That is truly kind of you, Monkey!" said

Goggs.
"Kind? What do you mean, chump? It's not you I'm thinking about."

not you I'm thinking about."
"But it was I we were talking about, was It bot! Monkey, my dear fellow, have you happened to hotice that this water does not-talking about the same and the s of the beastly steric.

Then you are doomed: Nothing on earth "Then you are doomed! Nothing on earth will only die quickly I can get out of this will only die quickly I can get out of the before I expire by using your corpse as a footstool? I should not like to ask can be not to be not kev!

"Gurregagg! Ow! Yow!"
"Frank Monk had tried to climb out of the butt, but had slipped back, and had soused fairly under again

"In the words of the Bard of Avon—or was it Wilkie Bard?—' that does it!" said Goggs. 1h Wilkie Bard?—'that does it!" said Goggs.
"After that we can have no expectation of your recovery, and I.am sure it will be less painful to you to put your head under water and be done with the job at once."
"You silly fathead! How are we going to get out of this?"

"Ask me another," replied Goggs mildly.
"Are you fellows coming out and up?"
demanded Wootton minor impatiently.
"I fear that the answer is in the negative," said Goggs "See here, we've got to get out of this, Goggles!" said Frank Monk. "Ugh! The stuff niffs horribly. We shall be poisoned if we stay here much longer." "As you refuse to decease-"

"You had better climb up on my shoulders and get out so. "What?"

"My dear Monkey, I trust that I make myself intelligible."

Yes; but-

Ret

"But—" That is exactly the case. It is 'butt' adeed, and I really think it is time we ob out of it."
"If I climb on your shoulders, how are got.

"Leave that to me, I beg."
"Oh, all serene. There's one good thing—I can't make you in a worse state than you

And with that Monk, using Goggs' back as an aid, scrambled up, and fairly flopped over the edge of the butt to the ground

Are you out?" asked Goggs gently "Are you fellows coming up? called down

Lane.
"It looks like it. Ugh!" grunted Monk. "It looks like it. Ugh!" grunted Monk.
"Yes, ft looks like it. Coming in a minute, my estimable Carbuncle!" said Goggs.
And he levered himself up and out, dropping lightly-on his feet by the side of his

And he levered himself up and out, dropping lightly on his feet by the side of his partner in minoritane, partner in minoritane, but the side of his partner in minoritane. The side of his partner is not seen to the side of his partner in the prospect has no real charm for me. "Ught" Prank Monk got to his feet. met. "I am rath the cooled bounder I ever met."

'I am rather more than cool," answered

Goggs. "I am chilly!"

"On, come along!"

They moved round to the tree.

"My dear Chimpannee, you do—er—niff see "They for the tree."

"I am afraid I do. I quite hate myself."

"I am afraid I do. I quite hate myself."

"I am afraid I do. I quite hate myself."

"I am afraid I do. I quite hate myself." "I am afraid I do. I quite hate myself," and afraid when the thrightened up as Gogra said saidy. But he brightened up as Gogra said saidy. But he thrightened up as the work of the thrightened whether thry do, anyway." replied Most when the work of the thrightened whether thry do, anyway." replied Most when the work of the work o go. When Goggs said. Goggs said.

They climbed the tree, leaving a slimy trail behind them. They crossed by the ladder to the lower roof. But they had still to get to the higher one, and the rain-pipe had one. It lay on the flags below.

to the higher one, and the rain-pipe had one. It lay on the fings below, "The ware you going to get but the "Strande", said Goggs musingly, "that with so many acute intelligences assembled together here it should not have occurred to any one of them that it would be quite a useful notion to go down and open the win- a useful notion to go down and open the win-

w for me! dow for us!"

Perhaps it was strange, especially as that very course had been suggested before the rain-pipe had given way. But no one had thought of it since that.
"If you get on my shoulders again, my thought or it since that,

"If you get on my shoulders again, my dear Orang-Outang," said Goggs, "and Gay and some other muscular gentleman reach down and grip your hands, I think it possible down and grip your hands, I think it possible that you may be hauled up."

"And what about you?" asked Monk.
"There is a way for me, if you have no objection. If those above can shift their grip to your armpits, to ease the strain, I can clamber up by your back."
"You mean it?"

You mean it "You mean it?"
"Do I not always mean what I say, my dear fellow?"
Goggs planted himself as securely as possible on the roof as he spoke, his face to the woll.

wall.
Frank Monk climbed to his shoulders, not without difficulty. Gay and Wootton major without difficulty. Gay and Wootton major stretched up. He gave a slightly as as a stretched up. He gave a slightly large they gripped him by the wrists.
"Yow" That hurte!" gaaped Monk But in another moment they had hauled him farther up, and had got their hands under his arms

"Now, Johnny!" called Bags. Goggs gave a little jump, and seized Monk round the legs round the legs.

In another second or two he had pulled bimself up along his back to his shoulders. Then he reached up and reached the outstretched hands of Bags and Tricks, and stretched hands of Bags was pulled on to the roof.

me embrace you, my dear Blount! "Let me embrace you, my dear Blount!"
he said effusively. "Rescuer! Preserver!
Heroic boy! Come to my atms!"
"Here, get away! Gerraway, I tell you!"
howled Bags. "You— Oh, my hat!"

"Here, get away! Gerraway," I telf you!"
Here, get away! Gerraway,
"Here, get away! Gerraway, how'ed Bags. "You— Oh, my hat!"
"Trickett, my dear—

and Tricks.

"If you silly cases haven't had enorotting for one night I have!" said L rather crossly.

"Eet is vat you call cheely oop he said Lane.

rather crossly.

"Eet is vat you call cheely oop here,"
"En is vat you call cheely oop here,"
"Oh, chuck it, you two! You'll be having
"Oh, chuck it, you two! You'll be having There was really danger of that. The rood, though its pitch was not steep, was not exactly the safest place for such games,
And at blad imbignet there came proof of

"My word, you do niff, Monkey!" jeered

"My word, you do nist, Monkey!" jered wootken minor.

"Yarooh!" howled at him.

"Yarooh!" howled Wootken minor, as he ald down the root to get, out of the way. I have a superior with the superior was a superior was pulsar was a state that made hasquire on to him as the superior was pulsed up within an inch of going over. His feet had touched the putter plain. I have a palled up, and inch of going over. His feet had touched the putter plain. I have a palled up, and a superior was pulsed up within an inch of going over. His feet had touched the putter plain. I have a palled up, and a superior was pulsed up within an inch of going over. His feet had touched the putter plain. I have a palled up, and a superior was pulsed up within and inch of going over. His feet had touched the putter plain was a palled up, and the same a superior was pulsed up within and the putter plain. I have a superior was pulsed up within and chuck trying to seen the with going was a superior was a superior with the superior was pulsed and let's accomplication of putting in by They graved along the root affer him.

the skylight."
They crawled along the roof after him. The skylight was sonic distance from the place at which they had got up, and some of them did not quite enjoy that slow and difficult progress. The raid on St. Jim's had been a huge success, but they outlet have been satisfied with a little less excit-have been astisfied with a little less excitment to follow it.
"Closed and fastened!" said Gay Iugu-briously.

"And after all this!" growled Wootton major.

"Let's have some more of your blessed eleverness, Goggles!" said Carboy sarcastic-If you will be so very kind as to let come near the skylight, it is just possible

"if you will be so very kind as to let me come near the skylight, it is just possible that I may be able to do something." The state of the source of the state of the source of the sou

"Hear, hear!" myrmured Bags and Tricks and Waters in chorus. "Gentlemen, I thank you for this unsolicited testimonial," said Goggs. "I would bow if my position allowed of it. Please consider that I have done so."

He wriggled his way to the skylight, sniffing as he went can have too much scent," he said.

"One can have too much scent," he said.
"I shall not patent Essence de Bilge-water as a suitable toilet adjunct. I am not sure that everyone would like it."
"Bedad, does be never run down at all, at all?" asked Nicky O'Donneli.
"He's a blessed gramophone, whatever,"

Printed and published erry Monday by the Proprietor, the Analyzamated Free. Limited. The Fischery House, Paringdon Steed, Lordon, N.C. & Advertisament of Colour The Fischery House, Paringdon Steed, Lordon, N.C. & Short-print raises: Health and shread (except South Africa) Advertisament of Leaf and Analyzamate, and Analyzamate, said Morgan. "If the bounder doesn't look sharp, I shall be falling to sleep and tumbling off the giddy roof."

"Do not go hunting for bilge-water dear fellow," said Goggs mildly. "App "Do not go bunting for bilge-water, my dear fellow," said Goggs, middly. "Apply to the old firm of Goggs, Gorilla, & Co., quite Unlimited—as to niff, if in no other respect." But Goggs was at work as be talked. He tried the blade of a knife, but found that uscless. Carboy, something of a dandy, frouged a pair of mail-cisors; but they failed do the trick "There is nothing else for it, I fear," said Goggs, with a sigh.

And he threw up a leg and brought his And he threw up a leg and brought his loot down smartly on the ground-glass of the skylight.

the skylight. Fragments tinkled to the floor thrust in his hand and unfastened oggs the catch

"Now you've done it!" gasped Lane.
"I intended to do it," replied Gogga coolly.
"Shall I go first?"
"There will be no end of a row about that skylight in the morning," grumbled Wootlon gives.

Wootton minor.

Woutton minor:
"Would the row be less if we were convicted of a night out?" inquired Goggs.
And almost as he spoke he slipped through the opening, and dropped lightly on the floor ten feet below.

An Alarm of the Night.

ORDON GAY followed, and landed on his feet, as Gogs that dome. But he down with a thump.

"A repetition of that noise for about the twelfth time might quite possibly wake someone," said Gogs blandy." I had never suspected you before of being so heavy-footed, 300 the said of the sai oyrul.

On choose that! said Gay. "I can't cont what you're built of, Goggles. After all this you seem as fresh as a day, and I don't mind owning that it's as much as I can do the keep on my pins. Hold on, you fellows! You musta't all drop like I did.

Ill stand underneath, and was as id. you fellows! You flustat all drop like I did.

I'll siand underneath, and you can step on to my shoulders and slide down."

'If you will allow me, Joyful"Bats! You're not going to be allowed to do everything."

'I'm coming!" said Monk.

'Shall I held your nose for you, Joyful?

"Shall I hold your hose for you, Joylus' inquired Goggs.
"Yes, rather! No, you silly ass! You're as niffy as he is."
Monk's legs appeared through the opening.
His feet lumbled for Gay's shoulders, and found them. He slid down his chum's back easily. "Whew!" said Gay. "I'm glad that's over, anyway."

"If you think you smell like attar of roses yourself you're above a bit off it," answered

The tempers of all except Goggs, and possibly Bags and Tricks, were badly frayed by this time. Wagtail, who came nate, was the control of the tempers of the

be.".
"Think

be."
"Think I'm going till everyone else is down, fathead!" snapped Wagtali.
"D'Domell was next, and he managed the descent in good style. But Morgan was less believed by the best of the in a heap.

"Ow! My napper!" mumbled Gay.
"Yow-ow! I've busted something!" wailed

"Yowwell are Deserved Morganization," in issed Monk Morganization," seeing in its seed Monk "Keep back, above there!" whispered Gogs. The whisper came clearly to the ears of Wootton minor, who was just about to deseemd to the rest, with a word of "Through the skylight the moon shone in "rightly. But the passage a few yards beyond rightly but the passage a few yards beyond the skylight the moon shone in the passage as few yards beyond the skylight the moon shone in the passage as few yards beyond the passa

Through the skylight the moon shone in brightly. But the passage a few yards beyond it was in darkness, and next moment Gay, Monk, Morgan, O'Donnell, and Wagtail found themselves huddled together there.

(Continued on page 16.)

The Editor's Chat.

The Companion Papers are: THE MAGNET. THE CEM. THE BOYS' FRIEND. CHUCKLES. THE PENNY POPULAR. Every Monday. Every Word. Every Monday. Every Friday. Every Friday. YOUR EDITOR IS ALWAYS CLAD TO HEAR FROM HIS READERS.

For Next Monday :

"BUNTER THE BOLSHEVIK!" Ev Frank Richards.

Billy Bunter has played a good minny parts in his time, but when he develops Boisine visit tendencies he fairly. The business of the goody heart factory, "to see an expression of Boh Cherry's. Billy Bunter quite president business, and the see an expression of Boh Cherry's. Billy Bunter quite president business, and the see an expression of Boh Cherry's. Billy Bunter quite president business, and the see an expression of Boh Cherry's. Billy Bunter quite president of Mr. Queckle, and "the methods he adopted and the see and the se Billy Bunter has played a good many parts "BUNTER THE EOLSHEVIK!"

came to a sudden full-stop

came to a sudden full-stop.

I can give an even stronger recommendation than usual to next Monday's grand long complete story of Greyfriars. It sent my subeditor into bysterica; so I tremble to think of the effect it may have on some of my chums who are easily provoked to mirth!

NOW, BOYS AND GIRLS! WHAT ABOUT THIS ANNUAL?

A I amounted on this page last week, it has been proposed that a "Companion Papers Annual." See that a "Companion Papers Annual. See that a "Companion Papers and the present and the premier authors. It rests with my readers whether this supersions proposal is aqualised or carried supersions.

unanimously.

Be it understood that when I speak of a new the speak of a new the speak of a speak of a new the speak of pages, and the contents bill of which would be something like this:

something like this:
A Long Complete Story of Greyfriars School, Frank Richards.

A Long Complete Story of St. Jim's, by Martin Clifford. A Long Complete Story of Rookwood, by Own Conquest.

A Magnificent Long Complete Redskin

Story A Rousing Historical Tale of the Days of Monmouth.

Plenty of Bright, Humorous Verse. Plenty of Bright, Humorous.
And, on the pictorial side:
An Wonderful Coloured Cover.
A Wonderful Coloured Symptomic Reynolds,

Profuse Illustrations by warwick keynolds, H. Chapman, and others. Several Magnificent Coloured Plates. Several Fine Art Plates in Photogravure. Portrait Galleries of Greyfriars, St. Jim's, Portrail Galleries of Greyfriars, 83. Jim's, and Rookwood Characters.

Roughly speaking. the "Ahmuf" would consist of the foregoing feature. It would consist of the foregoing feature. It would be something which lovers of the Companion Papers could cherist throughout their lives; and they could be expensitely in the companion of the constitution of the companion of the constitution of the companion of the constitution of th

A SERIAL BY YOUR EDITOR !

Lest any of you missed last Wednesday's issue of the "Gem" Library, I will reproduce a suggestion contained therein—a suggestion that your Editor—spare his bithsel—should contribute a serial to one of the Companion

Papers " Dear Editor .- Could you not write a serial describing how the Companion Papers first started, how you met Frank Richards and Martin Ciliford and Owen Conquest, and diving your readers a glimpse of the per-sonality of these fine writers? "Such a serial would be a new and alto-gether unique departure, I know; but thou-sands of your chums would be delighted if you would lift the veil and show us how the work of the Companion Papers has been carried on since their inception.

on since their inception.

"Many of us are simply dying to know what sort of men our favourite authors are—whether they are tall or short, young or old, atbletic or deformed, and all that sort of thing.

"Do be a sport, and give us a serial on these lines!

"If you entertain any doubt as to the reception such a serial would receive, put a notice in your Chat, and I guarantee your sanctum will be flooded out with letters of approval and delight.

and delight.
"Don't hesitate, dear Editor. Think of the masses who are yearning and clamouring for such a serial!
Believe me,

"Your sincere friend,
"SUNNY JIM."

Now, I do not claim to be a Frank Richards or a Martin Clifford; and if I undertake the writing of such a serial my chums must, not expect a perfect masterpiece. Blessed are they who expect just a natural, straight-forward record of my experiences, for they shall not be disappointed—at least, they won't be if they write at once and give me their unanimous sanction to go abead!

THE MEN OF MIDDLESEX!

"Middlesex to Wit," published at one shilling by Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, is a cheery little hook concerning the part played by Middlesex in the Great War. It is comby Middlesex in the Great War. It is com-piled by Clive Fenn, whose name is not un-known to readers of the Companion Papers, known to readers of the Companion Papers, and contains contributions by Sir Owen Search, the Companion of th

A SPLENDID TREAT THAT'S HARD TO BEAT! Lest there be any of my readers who are

Lest there be any of my readers who are croping in darkness with regard to the letest should like to draw their attention to the should like to draw their attention to the should like to draw their attention to the should with the should like to draw their attention to the should be sh these fine new stories.

I have no sympathy to waste on these readers. If they have missed this feast of fiction, it's their funeral. I warned them quite plainly that to ensure getting a copy of the "Penny Popular" was to order in advance. It is a very simple precaution; and it makes all that difference between a happy and an unhappy Friday evening. "The 'Penny Pop Is still on top.

THE ONLY WAY

Order to-day,

S.V.P." H. A. H. (YOUR EDITOR).

"Where's Geggles? subsected Wegeth, in of my dear little (ricard, above they must amplication."

In addition, the subsection of the light of the mough it, string your heart, and forge soon began to follow their example, when the promote that the position of the subsection of the su where the street and the street and the skylight softly descended. The light was submed now, for the ground-glass did not let it through quite as a clear sheet would have done.

was subdued now for the ground-glass disnot left it through quite as a clear street.

Footsteps sounded along the passage.

Footsteps are passage and the passage along the passage along the passage along the passage.

Footstep and passage are passage and passage along the p

But in that moment Goggs acted.
But in that moment Goggs acted.
It was no time for half measures. Risks land to be taken. Taking them could hardly land to be taken. Taking them could hardly nake matters worse.

"Melpl. Marder: Reip:"
The cries seemed to the cars of the juniors. The cries seemed to the cars of the juniors of the cries of the public of the cries of the crie at once.

Goggs, who had thrown his roice to produce those cries, heaved a sigh of relief. He had counted upon Messes Adams and Smith showing the pluck of men in this apparent crist-, and he had not counted in value.

vain.

Mr. Smith seized the arm of Mr. Adams hervonsly, and the Fourth Form-master was not altogether sorry to feel that grip. But they went, and they went at once; and that was what mattered.

was what mattered.
Gogge' voice came through the gloon to Gay and the four with him.
"Get the rest down quickly, and secon for the dormitories! I must keep these two and dominators: I must keep three two manused.

I must also be light-looted after the maders.
The five understood, dogs meant to lure Measts. Adman and smith below the dominator foot and to keep them hasy till everyone had had a chan and smith below the dominator of the down the same that had been the same that the same that the same the same that th hand in a tight j-lace.

The descent was recommenced, and went on swiftly and without further mishap. Beanwhite, Goggs was playing his lone hand against the two masters.

He was only a few yards behind them, standing back in a dark corner, when they standing back in the floor below, where the

the state of the s

Help: Oh, help:

"Melpis Oh, help?"
Mr. Smith started back, with an exclama-tion of fear. The cry was like that of some-on, in mortal agony, it seemed to him.
But Mr. Adams started forward, sure that it came from below; and his colleague, still graphic his arm, followed, or was borne chong with him. "I am sorry!" murmured Goges to himself.

"Adams is worthy of respect, John, my boy; Alams has pluck. Smith also is not absotively despicable, though it is to be doubted whether he would go aleas. But for the sale

The two were going on down the stairs, and no sound of opening doors came to of significants. It retempts the stairs of the stairs of the stairs of the stairs of the stairs. It retempts the downstream of the stairs of the stairs of the stairs of the stairs were situated, and it seemed most unlikely that any cry could have come from there will be staired and the stairs of the stairs were shown the stairs of the follows of the stairs of the follows of the stairs of the stairs

"It does not come again the same as searching in-"No. I must that nothing dreadful has "No. I must make a searching in-horization." We must make a searching in-terior with the same more; but for that I think we might rouse a few of the seniors. By the way, what a very peculiar and un-pleasant, ameli there is:"
"Itset" murraured Goggs to himself."

recipients if we have no more: but for that I think we misht roue a few of the senior. By the way, what a try peculiar and unit the property of the property o

"Get 'em off, chump, and get into bed;" zaid Tricks, reasonably enough, "Someone may come along at any minute." The other three were already undecasing.

Wastisi.
Put them in bed with Snipe: "and Tricks.
Good notion: I will act upon it?"
You chuck It, you sweep, "out of bed?" sounded a voice from the door.
Art. Adams stood, there. Gogge made a rush for his hed. He had taken off everything the stood there to be the stood to be the stood under it. He remembered that he had to sleep in that bed.

"Who was that?" snapped Mr. Adams.

Then he sniffed. He miffed so loudly and in such a marked manner that Goggs knew the game was up as far as he personally was concerned. He came from under the bed. He stood meekly, his head langing.

You, Goggs! What have you been doing, and what is the cause of this disgusting smell?

smell?

"I have met with a slight accident, sir.
I tambled into a water-butt!" replied Goggo.
Mr. Adams, who liked Goggs, and ind a sense of humour, was less annoyed than most masters would have been.
"Have you been walking in your sicep.

masters would have been.

"Have you been walking in your steep.

"Again, sir, my regard for veracity stands in my way. It was not in my sicep that I walked. I indulyed in a promenade upon the rool."

the root—
"Upon the root! Really, Goggs, I coh hardly believe that you are quite sinke?"
I assure you that I am, if. The moonlight was lovely. The water-built was not at root that I am, if. The moonlight was lovely. The water-built was not at root the state of the state of the state Built was the state of the state of the
Built was the state of the state of the
That possibly explains the cries that Mr.
Smith and I heard.

Into you cry out nor nest when You left smith and I heard.

Smith and I heard.

Gogs wished that Mr. Askans would not ask on many quasiloux. He had wisde up his could get the property of the a batt of water. Way, none my smell is here, too:

"Yee, Goggs seems to have been a share of Monk's idiocy, though he did not mention the fact that Monk was with him."

"And Monk did not say that Gogs was "Well, well, this will have to be inquired into in the morning. What have you done shout Monk!"

"I have seem thin to the bath-room, Adama."

about Monk?"
"I have sent him to the bath-room, Adams,"
"You could not have done better, my dear fellow. Gogs, remove, your polluted person at once to the bath-room. As for these clothes, I should recommend that you throw them out of the window. In the morning they must be burned. I think. Pals! I am

Johnny Goggs went off to join Frank Monk in the bath-room, and the masters departed "He s in for it in the morping!" chartlet snipe. "Serve the bounder dashed wel

Has it occurred to you. Snipe," said Bagthat you and your precious pals are also in for it in the norming? We know jolly well who serewed that window down."

(Another grand long instalment of this magnificent school serial will appear in next Mendon's lesse, Order early.)