

Magnet 12

THE SCHOOLBOY BARBER!

A BIG SURPRISE FOR MR. QUELCH.

THE FIRST CHAPTER. "Get Your Hair Cut!"

ODD!

Mr. Quelch, the master of the Mr. Quelch, the master of the Remove Form at Greyfriars School, rapped out the name. But the owner of it did not reply, or even look up subject.

Harry Wharton looked round at Alonzo Todd in some alarm. Mr. Quelch was growing angry, and he had already taken a business-like grip on the pointer. Harry Wharton tried to catch Alonzo Todd; eye, but in vain.

Todd was apparently immersed in thought. That was nothing unusual, for Alenzo Todd was a strange sort of fellow. Alenno Todd was a strange sort of tellow. In fact, on some subjects he was a genius. At all events, he said he was, and he had the mformation first-hand. Words of six or seven syllables, of which the other collows did not even know the meaning, rattled off Alonzo Todd's tongue at high-time special syllables. Todd's tongue at high-time special syllables was fairly going. hing speed when he was fairly going. He could tell you the history, past present, and to come, of the potato, for instance. With excited face, and eyes gleaming down his long nose, he would hold forth for hours together on the subject of the potato, which was his favour-ite. But he would sometimes give the potato a rest in favour of some other

When Alonzo Todd was on the trail, as Bob Cherry had put it, of a new and learned subject, he was lost to the world learned subject, he was lost to the world learned to his surroundings. At such a time, what did Roman history matter? But Mr. Horace Henry Samuel Quelch, who was master of the Remove Form, had no sympathy whatever with Alonzo Todd's ideas, and it was his duty to cram a certain quantity of Roman history into the heads of the Removites

Hence the cloud that gathered on his brow, and his grip on the pointer, when Todd failed to answer to his name. "Todd!"

The name was rapped out for the third Mr. Quelch's voice rose crescendo, but still the deep thinker did not hear, or did not heed

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 607.

Alonzo Todd was sitting at the end of form, and Harold Skinner was next to Skinner could have nudged him into wakefulness; but Skinner didn't. Skinner was a cad, and he preferred to sit tight and wait for the fun.

"Todd !"

"The ass!" muttered Harry Wharton. "He'll get a licking! The utter duffer! What bee has he got in his bonnet this

Robert Ogilvy, the Scots junior, jerked paper ball towards Todd to startle

"Ogilvy!"

"Yes, sir "

"You will take fifty lines!"

"Todd!" Mr. Quelch took two long strides towards Alonzo Todd, and gave him a rap on the knuckles that effectually startled him out of his deep reflections. " Todd ! "Ow!"

"Boy! What do you mean by this conduct! I have spoken to you four or five times, and you have not answered!" thundered Mr. Quelch. Alonzo Todd blinked at him. "I am sore view 1."

"I am sorry, sir; I did not hear you-or, perhaps it would be more correct to say that I did not heed. I was certainly conscious of someone speaking, but I tried to shut out the noise so that it would not interfere with the thread of my thoughts.

Mr. Quelch gasped, and the Removites asped, too. They were used to curious gasped, too. things from Alonzo Todd, but this was strong, even for Alonzo.

"Todd! Dear me! Sometimes I am tempted to believe, Todd, that you are no more than an idiot!" "Oh sir!" .

"If I did not think that I should certainly call you out and cane you very severely indeed!"

"Silence, boy!" roared Mr. Quelch.
"I will not be interrupted in this way when I am talking. Your general appearance, Todd, convinces me that you are neglecting not only your work, but are slack in the elementary duties every boy in the school is expected to attend to attend to,"

"I—"
"No wonder you cannot even hear your Form-master's voice," cried Mr.
Quelch. "Your hair, Todd, is a disgrace to the school—it is all over your ears! When did you has have it cut?"
"About, simit weeks ago, sir!" seeked

"About eight weeks ago, sir!" Mr. Quelch's gimlet-like eyes looked more steely than ever as he glared down on the head of the unfortunate Alonzo. and there was a general titter from the rest of the Removites. "Old Quelch is on the war path." mur-mured Bob Cherry to Frank Nurrent, who was sitting next to him. Cherry !

"Ye-e-es, sir?"
"You were talking to Nugent. You will take fifty lines!

"Oh sir!" "Don't answer me back, boy!" shouted

Mr. Quelch. "And, Cherry"
Yes, sir?"

"Yes, str?"
"You will take another fifty lines for appearing in class with a head of hair, sir, that looks like a woolly door mat." Bob Cherry's face went crimson.

"A-a door-mat, sir?"

"Yes; your hair is a disgrace, and it does not appear to have been cut once this term! "May I speak, sir?" stammered Bob.

"May 1 speak, sir: standard "What have you to say?"
"I—I haven't had my hair cut, sir, sir!" said Bob.
Mr. Quelch stared hard at Bob Cherry.
"What have you mean, boy?" he "What do you mean, bey?" he snapped. "What do you mean by uttering such an absurd remark to your Formmaster

"It's-it's the profiteers, sir! All the barbers in Friardale and Courtfield have -have stuck up their prices, and none of the chaps will pay, sir!"

"Nonsense!" snapped Mr. Quelch.

"You will get your hair cut to-day without fail !"

"Bunter!"

"Yes, Mr. Quelch?" replied Billy Bunter, the fat junior. Bunter was the Copyright in the United States of America.

fattest and greediest boy at Greyfriars, and was known as the Owl of the Rehe wore, or sometimes he was referred to as the Porpoise because of his size. to as the Anyway, Billy Bunter knew that he was being spoken to now, and he sat up in the direction of Mr. Quelch.

"Bunter," said Mr. Quelch, in acid tones, "you, too, will take fifty lines for having the audacity to appear in class with such a mop of hair. It is positively disgusting, and you will get it cut today!"

Billy Bunter ran his fat fingers through his hair, and blinked harder than ever.
"All right, sir!" he said. "C-can you a shilling. lend me a bob-er-I mean, a shilling, "Boy !"

Mr. Quelch simply gasped out the Bunter, and the junior's unparalleled nerve in talking like this in the Form-room absolutely took his breath away.

"Yes, sir? I haven't any money on me at present. I'm expecting a postal-order to-night from one of my titled relations, so if you could oblige me by lending me, say, a couple of bob—er—I mean, two shillings, I—I could get my hair cut to-day, as you suggest, sir, in spite of the profiteers

The Remove giggled.

"My only hat!" murmured Tom Brown to Tom Redwing. "Bunter has the thickest head in class, and he's looking out for a thick ear to match, I suppose."

"Watch Quelch!" grinned Has Wharton. "He's just beginning Harry Wharton.

"Bunter, I hardly know what to say you. You are an—an extraordinary by! Stand out here, sir, and hold out to you. boy! Stan

"M-m-m-my hand, sir?"
"Yes!" said Mr. Quelch. "I'm going to punish you for—for your astounding impertinence! Hold out your hand, Billy Bunter slowly left his place.

'If you please, sir-"
'Not a word! Hold out your hand "If you please, asr—"Not a word! Hold out your hand!"
Billy Bunter held it out gingerly enough, and Mr. Quelch gave him a sharp rap across the palm, and the fat Removite gave a how!.
"Ow! Yow!"
"This out the other hand, Bunter!"

"Hold out the other hand, Bunter!" "If you please, sir—"
"The other hand instantly!" thundered the Form-master.

The other hand received another cut, and Billy Bunter squirmed.
"Now sit down!" said Mr. Quelch angrily. "And you will see that you appear in class to morrow morning with your hair properly cut. Wharton!"

Harry Wharton, the captain of the Remove, stood up in his seat.

"Wharton, it is astounding that you should appear in class with your hair that should make it your duty to see that your general appearance is any example your general appearance is any example to the rest of the boys."

"But I don't see why we should pay a shilling for a hair-cut, sir," said Harry Wharton. "The barbers in Friardale and Courtfield used to do it for fourpence, and it is only profiteering to charge a shilling each, sir!' "Nonsense, Wharton!" snapped Mr. Quelch. "I do not think any of you have taken the trouble to even look for a barber's shop."

'Oh sir "The whole class is a standing disgrace to Greyfriars," continued Mr. Quelch.
"Nugent, Bolsover, Bulstrode, Dutton, Fish, Linley, Russell—why, goodness me,

on looking round I can see that every boy in the class has neglected to get his There is one exception, and that hair cut! There is boy is Mauleverer.

Herbert Mauleverer, the schoolboy

merpert Mauleverer, the schoolboy earl, rose in his seat.

"I-I got my hair cut only yesterdny, sir," he drawled. "Of course, I get it trimmed every week, and then I get it cut properly once a fortnight!".

"And what were you charged?"

what were you charged?" snapped Mr. Quelch.

The dandy of the Remove looked nonplussed. I-I'm afraid I couldn't tell you, sir!

I think I gave the man a half-crown! Then you are foolishly extravagant Mauleverer ! But that has nothing at all to do with the subject at present. Every boy will see that between now and tomorrow morning he has his hair properly Otherwise he will be most severely punished. We will now proceed with the lesson. And if you show the least in-attention again, Todd, I shall send you to the headmaster to be dealt with!

The lesson was resumed, and the Removites were obliged to submit without further argument to Mr. Quelch's stern handling of what, for several weeks, had been a very sore point with the boys of Grevfriars.

THE SECOND CHAPTER. Fishy's Idea !

ESSONS were over at last, and Mr. Quelch released the Removites, who were glad enough to get away. The Form-master was not often in this sort of mood, and it was very seldom indeed that he threatened the whole class with punishment if something or other was not done

The Removites flocked up to the Remove passage, and went into their various studi studies.

"Old Quelchy's fairly on the war-path," said Hary Whafton to Frank Nugent
as the two juniors entered Study No. 1.
Wharton and Nugent shared No. 1.
"Your hair is a bit lanky." laughed Frank Nugent. "But it wouldn't have been noticed if it hadn't been for that duffer Tedd!"."

"Alonzo's an ass!"

"And then Bunter got Quelch's goat out, too!"

"Bunter wants boiling " Harry Wharton flung his books on to the bookease shell with a snort. Mr.
Quelch's severe admonishing had not pleased the captain of the Remove, and he was feeling very short and snappy when the study door was flung open. "Hallo, hallo, hallo!" cried Bob

"Hallo, hallo, hallo!" cried Bob herry. "Can we come in?" "Yes, come along," Bob!" replied Cherry, "Can we come along," Bob!" representation of the come along, "Bob!" representation of the company with the company wi

"That's what I've come for. Marky and Inky are here, too!"

Mark Linley, the Lancashire scholar-ship boy, followed closely on Bob Cherry's heels, and behind him came Hurree Jamset Ram Singh, the dusky Nabob of Bhanipur. These three and Wun Lung, Bhanipur. These three and Wun Lung, the little Chinese junior, shared Study No. 13; but they were more often than not to be found in Study No. 1, chatting or feeding, as the case might be, with Wharton and Nugent.

The five juniors sat themselves down and made themselves quite at home. "It really is a bit thick of old Quelchy to get his rag out about our blessed hair!" growled Bob.

"But our esteemed and ludicrous sahib really meant we must get our hair done cutfully," fully," said Hurree Singh, in his ird and wonderful English.

Harry Wharton grunted.

"Why should we pay these beastly profiteers a bob for it, though ! It's a rotten scandal "It's a rotten scandal!

"I'm not going to get my hair cut until those beasts cut down the price," said Harry Wharton. "It's all very fine for Quelchy to say we haven't tried; but we jolly well have!"

"I went to Rogers' yesterday evening. He's stuck his price up now with the rest! "And Wade's at Courtfield have, too."

"And so have Stanford's."

"It's nothing more nor less than lowdown profiteering, and I vote we strike against it." against it."

"It's no good striking unless we get everybody into it," said Bob Cherry.
"Let's start a bleased union. These rotten barbers are Bolshies, and nothing elas! Hallo ! Who is this ?"
There was a knock at the study door, and it flew open. Fisher Tareleton Fish, the American junior and general hustler.

of the Remove, came in, smiling cheer-"Good!" said Fish. "I guess you galoots are at home The thin, keen face of the American junior was unusually animated, and his eyes were gleaming with excitement. His thin, staccato voice silenced the general discussion going on amongst Harry Wharton & Co. I say, I guess you're at home?"

"I say, I guess you're at nome:
"Can't you see we are, you dummy?"
snapped Harry Wharton. "Now you've seen we're at home you can clear out!"
"Nope!" said Fish. "I guess I've got a proposition to place before you proposition to place before you fellows

"Eh ? "A proposition! It'll solve all this trouble with Quelchy, and will defeat the object of these profiteers at the same

"Oh!"

"I guess you fellows have to come to me for ideas. This sleepy old island ain't me for ideas. Ins sleepy old island an thright enough for business stants!"

"Don't you bring any of your rotten wheezes in here!" snapped Bob Cherry.
"You'll get it in the neck if you do!"

"Not this time, Cherry!"

Bob Cherry picked up a large volume lying on the study table, and Fish moved towards the door in case the volume should come flying across the room.

"Where will you have it, Fishy?" said Bob Cherry politely.
"Now, I guess I want you guys to listen to me," replied the American junior. "Will you give me a minute or win you give me a minute or two to explain?" "All right, Fishy," laughed Harry Wharton. "We will give you one minute exactly, and then Bob will fire the book." Fisher Tarleton Fish seemed satisfied, and he came in and closed the study

"Buck up, you duffer!" exclaimed Beb Cherry, taking out his watch, lost ten seconds up to now."

"It's the hair-cutting old Quelchy talked about." said Fish. "Just you silly galoots listen here! I guess we all got it hot and strong in class this mornis right. You jays do want a hair-cut pretty badly."
"Well?"

"I guess I'm the guy who is going to too!

cut it, too!"
"What?" shrieked the juniors.
"I'm your man," said Fish. "I guess
I'm on the spot, and there ain't no profiteering prices about me. I cut hair for fourpence a time. No more and no less!

"My hat "I guess it's the idea of the century, continued the American Junior. "And when once we start on these profiteers THE MAGNET LIBBARY.—No. 607.

they can look out for whole streaks of Bob Cherry flung the heavy volume down on to the study table again. "That's not a bad notion for once, Fishy," he said. "There isn't any reason why we shouldn't get our hair cut here when you come to think of it." "Not a bad wheeze at all," agreed Harry Wharton. "I shall want to see

Fishy experiment on somebody first, though?"

"Rather!"

"I guess that's easy," said Fish.
"Now, we'll just have listy as the model.
Pass me a pair of scissors, Wharton."
The dusky Nabob of Bhanipur leapt up in his chair. "My esteemed and ludricrous chum will be attacked hangfully before he chops my hair cutfully!" he cried.

Come on, you galoot!

"Really, my esteemed idiot, I—"
"Sit down!" roared Fish. "How the dickens do you think I can cut your blessed har if you stand up and jabber that rotten English at me?"

Ha, ha, ha Hurree Singh backed to the other side of the table, and smiled across at the American junior pleasantly.

"Come on, Inky," said Fish. "If these jays want to see an exhibition hair-cut I guess you'll oblige them?". "But, my ludicrous chum, I object regretfully

Fisher T. F. Fish glared across at the

"I-I guess I'll only cut one side just to show these galoots. Come on, Inky, it won't hurt you, and I guess that black, curly noddle of yours won't take long to grow again."

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, na!"
"My esteemed and ludicrous chum can make up his mind quickfully that my honourable hair is not to be hacked cutfully," said Hurree Singh.
"I don't blame you, Inky," laughed
Harry Wharkon. "But I do think there

Harry Wharton. "But I do think there is something in this wheeze of Fishy's; but it's Wednesday to-day, and I'm not oldy well gloing to waste a half-holiday having my hair cut here!"
"It won't take long," said Fish. "Perhaps it won't; but we're going down to Courtfield this afternoon."

What time?"

"Most half-past three."
"About half-past three."
"Well, I guess that'll just suit me," said Fish. "I'll get the barber's shop ready, and then I want to go down to Moses' and hire a few things."

"What on earth for?"

"You guys don't know much about these things. You can't open a blessed shop without a stock, can you?"

"Why can't you? All you want is a brush and comb and a few sciesors and You can borrow those things an apron. in the school."

" Yep !"

"Yep!"
"Well, what do you want to get from Moses' second-hand shop?"
"I guess I know what I want, and I'll come down to Courtfield with you when you go."

"All right, then."

"All right, then."
"Now, I guess I must hustle around," said Fish, opening the study door.
"It's no good opening a barber's shop unless the place is well stocked, and it all't going to be easy to get scissors and all't going to be cast ports good on these guys fir the Remove." Ha, ha, ha!

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"Don't you 'let' me catch you taking any of my things!" hooted Bob Cherry.
"You just leave my blessed comb alone!"

"And mine, too!" THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 607.

"Wall you'll call at Study No. 14 when you're ready" said Fish. "By half-past three. I guess I shall have the shop going at full swing. But I guess I must see that guy Moise."
"All right, Fishy!" laughed Harry Whatton. "Well come along later ou and see how you are getting on. I'm Jolly corpus I'm and the going to let you land the said of th

"I guess that will be O.K.," said the American junior, elamming the study door to.

THE THIRD CHAPTER. Fish Starts Borrowing. HE schoolboy had

American ideas, and when once he started to work he went ahead with great speed, and ahead with great speed, carried out his ambitions ruthlessly.

Mr. Quelch's curt order to the juniors of the Remove Form that morning had or the Remove Form that morning had instantly suggested a golden opportunity in Fish's mind. His schoolmates' objection to paying exorbitant prices for a mere hair-cut had at once shown the Yankee a possible chance of raking in the sheekles. Fourpence for a hair-cut! the shekels. Fourpence for a hair-cut!
He worked it out in his brain at lightning speed. There were nearly fifty boys in the Remove. At fourpence a time this would bring him in quite a decent sum of money, and so Fish had thrown himself heart and soul into the scheme

Fish had an unlimited supply of ideas. Harry Wharton & Co. were sick to death even hearing about them, and never a week passed that the Yankee junior was not thrown out bodily through the doorway of Study No. 1. It seemed that Fish, as a general rule, had to suffer this penalty for "hawking" his wheezes penalty for "nawking" his wheelest round the Remove studies. And now that he had at last had a stunt more or less officially sanctioned by the captain of the Remove, Fish went ahead without wasting any more time.

He rushed down to the school noticeboard, and scribbled out a notice on a piece of paper he tore off the bottom of an annoncement already pinned up.

Fish licked his pencil and frowned, and then scribbled away, and pinned his effort up on to the board.
He read it through hastily before hurrying on.

"NOTICE.

"The firm of Fish, Limited, is opening hairdressing saloon in Study No. 14, Remove Passage, this afternoon (Wed nesday)

"All kinds of hair will be cut at ex-tremely low prices. Prefects and Sixth-Formers shaved at moderate prices. Shamboos extra. False hair supplied by Shampoos extra. False hair supplied by arrangement. Hair lotions, etc., obtainable. No connection with any other firm.

firm.
"Walk up in your thousands!"
"Opening day, Wednesday afternoon.
No Profiteering! Fellows in the Remove are invited to roll up in their thousands and support home industries.
"Cheap and good! Cash only taken! Anwhade asking for credit will be

"Chean and good! Cash only taken! Anybody asking for credit will be ejected. This is the offer of the season! "(Signed) FISHER TARLETON FISH, "Managing Director."

"I guess that fills the bill!" muttered Fish. "It'll fetch 'em all right. Now for stocking the saloon." He hurried away from the board as he pocket.

"I guess you jays have got a poor idea caught sight of a group of Removites of opening a saloon." coming along the passage, and he hurried upstairs again.

"Shaving's a new departure;" he said.
"That means I must have a razer. I'll try Coker of the Fifth, as he shaves cometimes

Fish arrived at Coker's study, and tapped on the door. A voice from within shouted out for him to enter, and the American junior opened the door and poked his head into the study. Horace Coker was there with his two thing."

Horace Coker was there with his two cronies, Potter and Greene of the Fifth. "What do you want, you young bounder?" snapped the great Coker. "I guess I want to borrow some-thing."

Coker jumped up and seized the poker out of the fire-grate, and Fish prepared to make a run for it. The Removites to make a run for it. Inc Removites were never very welcome in Coker's study. The burly Fifth-Former had been ragged too often for him to appreciate a friendly visit from a kid of the Lower Fourth, as he was pleased to refer to the Remove.

"I guess you needn't get excited, Coker, you jay!" cried Fish. "I only want to borrow your safety-razor and your hair-lotion and your brush and your comb, and Horace Coker and Potter and Greene rorace Coker and Fotter and creene exchanged glances. Fish's demand seemed too much for them. They stared at one another, and then stared at the Yankee junior. The great Fifth Formers were not quite prepared for such cheek night," said Fish, after a pause. "I guess you guys needn't think that I shall eat them."

"You—you cheeky young rotter!" roared Coker. "What's that?"

"What's that?"
"You dare to come to me to borrow my tackle? Me? Coker? Why I'll put this poker across your back if you aren't out of that doer in a second!"

"Get out !" "You silly, lopsided jay, I--"

Crash !

The poker flew across the study, and met the panels of the door with a crash. Fish bobbed his head out just in time, and slammed the door to with a bang. "You howling guy!" he roared through the keyhole. "I guess if that poker had got me I should have been killed!" Coker & Co., on the other side of the door, made a rush across the room, and fish heard them coming. He made up his mind in a flash, and flew along the corridor out of harm's way.

"My stars and stripes!" gasped Fish.

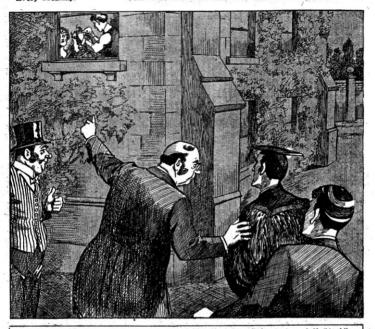

"It's no good going to those jays for anything. I guess this looks-like having to borrow the things out of the dormitories.

The American junior climbed the stairs leading to the Fourth Form dormitory, and entered after cautiously ascertaining whether anyone was inside. However, the coast was clear, and it did not take Fish long to walk down the long room and borrow a few articles from the tidy row of dressing tables. "Gee-whiz!" he muttered. "Just the very things for the saloon! Hallo!

very summy for the salcon! Halle! I guess that's a good nair-brush. And I'll just borrow those combs and those scissors there. Halle! What's this?".

Fish picked up a large bottle containing some highly-coloured liquid. Ho pulled out the cork and snifed at the contents. A pleasant accompanie. contents. A pleasant aroma satisfied Fish tremendously, and he replaced the cork and put the bottle into his trousers-

"Look, Quelch!" said the Fifth Form-master, pointing up to the window. "It's a most remarkable thing!" Mr. Quelch and Wingate followed the direction of Mr. Prout's outstretched arm, and the next moment they gave a ery of alarm. (See Chapter 9.)

this saloon will want more scissors, though I'll just go along to— My stars! There's some silly jay coming along!"

The sound of heavy footsteps on the stairs outside warned the Yankee junior that there was someone on their way up to the dormitory, and Fish looked around him with a scared expression.

Tramp, tramp, tramp!

"Oh, my stars!" gasped Fish. guess I'll have to get under a bed!" The American junior went down on his hands and knees, and scrambled under one of the beds, and waited in breathless expectation. The footsteps outside stopped at the door an instant, and then the owner of them tramped in, and made for one of the dressing tables.

Fish heard the intruder mutter something, and he peeped out from beneath the bed and watched.

"It's Blundell!" he murmured, as he ecognised the back of the burly Fifth-Former, who was looking over his dressing-table.

Blundell grunted.

"I guess that belongs to Coker," he my comb as well! If I catch the rotter on to the dormitory floor, and flew into a nuttered. "That'll do fine. I guess I'll half scrag him!" Fish quaked.

Blundell walked across to another dressing table, and borrowed a pair of brushes to tidy his hair down. The brushes to tidy his hair down. The operation took a minute or two, and Fish concluded that the Fifth-Former was going out, and was not intending to hang about in the dormitory. For once the Yankee's surmise was correct; for after setting his tie straight by the aid of the looking glass, Blundell went of the looking-glass, Blundell went stamping out of the dormitory, and closed the door behind him with a bang. Blundell was evidently feeling annoyed about the brushes.

Fisher Tarleton Fish scrambled out from beneath the bed, and after a brief hesitation replaced Blundell's brushes and borrowed somebody else's. At the same time he collected a few more bottles he found standing on the various tables.

"I guess I've just about got enough stock to open the saloon with," said the Yankee junior, saking a final look round. "I'll get down to the study now, and get the place in working order for the—Oh!"

"Some blithering fathead's been One of the bottles Fish had borrowed borrowing my brushes!" he said. "And slipped through his hands, and crashed One of the hottles Fish had borrowed dozen pieces. The bottle had contained some beautifully scented brilliantine, and had been used to beautify and improve Tomlinson's hair. Now the oil trickled its way across the polished floor of the dormitory, and the atmosphere became scented with a sickly aroma.

"Oh, my stars and stripes!" gasped Fish. "That's fairly busted it, if you like! I guess I'd better leave that as it is, before any of those guys in the Fifth Fish stood staring at the result of the occident for a moment or two, and then accident for a historic virtual turned towards the door.

"Stars and stripes!" he muttered. "I guess it's time I vamoosed this ranch. It won't be healthy for me if they find me and that rotten bottle in the same place.

- THE FOURTH CHAPTER. Johnny Bull Docsn't Like It.

ISHER T. FISH reached the Rehe gave a gasp of relief as he bounced into the end study-No. 14. He flung the door open with a crash, expecting to find Johnny Bull and Field, The Magner Library.—No. 607. his study-matee, inside. But the study was quite empty, and the Yankee junior placed the various articles he had raided from the Fifth-Formers, on the study table.

The end study was not a very large room. It was a good deal smaller than No. 1; and Fish surveyed the little apart-

No. 1; and Fish surveyed the little apartment with a critical eye.

"I guess this is a poky saloon for a barber," he muttered; "but it can't be helped, and st'll have to do. These jays must know where to come to, I'll just write out a notice."

The American junior tore out a sheet of paper from Johnny Bull's exercise-book, and scribbled out a few words in a bold hand.

" FISH, LIMITED.

HAIRDRESSING SALOON.

ALL KINDS OF HAIR CUT. 4d. EACH.

SHAVING DONE HERE, 3d. SHAMPOO. 2d.

WIGS MADE BY ARRANGEMENT. NO PROFITEERING.

SUPPORT HOME INDUSTRIES!

ROLL UP!"

"That's the stuff to give them!" chuckled Fish, pinning the sheet of paper on to the outside of the study door, and standing back to regard the effort with great satisfaction. "Now I guess there's to be a few changes made in this blessed study !

Fish snatched off his Eton jacket, and flung it into a corner, and then set to in earnest. The table was shoved against the wall, and a cracked mirror hung on the wall just over it, and then a chair was placed in front of this.

The enamelled tin basin used for washing up the teathings was put on the table, quite handy, near the chair to be used by the customer.

The brushes and combs. and razors and bottles raided from the Fifth Form dormitory were next set out in neat little rows slong the table, and a dishcloth and an old towel, which had lay hidden for several terms in the bookcase cupboard, were dragged out and hung over the back of the customers' chair.

In a few minutes Study No. 14 was transformed. Johnny Bull and Field would barely recognise it as their own would barely recognise it as their own pet study when they came along. But a little thing like that never entered the Yankee's head, and he paused at last in his efforts, and stood with his hands on his hips with his legs wide apart.

"I guess that completely fills the bill," muttered. "When I've got the rest the stuff from old Moses, those jays he muttered. will show some surprise, I guess.

It remained to be proved that Fish was right in his surmise. There was quite a lot of trouble looming ahead for the ambitious Yankee ambitious ranage.

Footsteps could be heard coming along the Remove passage, and Fisher T. Fish closed the door quietly, so that his notice could be seen to advantage by anybody passing.

"Here come two of the jays!" mur-ured Fish. "I guess that bill of mine mured Fish. on the notice-board will soon begin to

The footsteps outside stopped, and somebody in the passage uttered an ejaculation, and the study-door was flung

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 607.

Johnny Bull and Field appeared, and they stared in astonishment.
"What the—" began Field.

"What the—" began Field.
"My giddy aunt!" gasped John Bull.
Fisher T. Fish greeted them with a

"I guess you're in time to open this show," he remarked "Are you looking for a cheap hair-cut, Bull?"
"A—a cheap hair-cut?"

"That's the notion. No profiteering. Everything cheap. Hair-cuts at four-pence a time; and shampoos only tuppence extra.

"B-but-grin.

"I guess you're surprised?" said Fish. These stunts have to be worked at double-quick time. webs on me, I can tell you!"

"Look at that blessed table!" gasped Field. "Where the dickens did you get that lot from?"

Borrowed !"

"And our blessed bowl!" exclaimed Johnny Bull. "What's that for?"

"Shampoos, you jay!"
"And what the dickens do you think we're jolly well going to do now you've turned our blessed study upside-down?" howled Bull. "I guess you'll have to lump it!"
"What?"

"You jays are all behind the times. Wharton's going to run this show, and I guess it's going to be the success of the century. Now then, are you looking for century. Now the cheap hair-cut? "No!" said Bull grimly. "Tm looking for a silly ass!"

"And I've found him!" said Bull.
"Wade in, Field!"

"Hands off, you guys!" roared Fish. "Don't you try your tricks here. It's and all you blessed guys have got to get your mops cut to-day, whether you like it or not! Johnny Bull leapt forward and gasped the edge of the study table. The Yankee junior gave a cry of alarm.

"Here, look out! You'll upset my store, I guess! Johnny Bull chuckled.

"That's just what I am going to do!"

he remarke "Oh! Hold on, you silly guy! Yow!" Crash !

Over went the table, and the borrowed stock of the Fish hairdressing establish-ment was hurled hurtling on to the study right was nursed nurting on to the study carpet. Fisher T. Fish staggered back, amid a shower of scissors and bottles and safety-razors and brushes and combs. "Yow! Yarop!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

Johnny Bull grasped the American junior in his sturdy arms. He rolled him junior in his sturdy arms. He rolled him over on the carpet, and bumped him

"There!" he gasped. "That's for turning my study into a barber's shop! "Yow!" "That's for Bump! That's for your blessed cheek, trying to diddle the chaps in the Remove! Yaroop ! Bump!

"That's for playing the giddy ox!"
"Yaroooh!" Bump

"And that's an extra one for luck!"
"Yarooow!"

Fisher T. Fish rolled on the carpet roaring. He rolled on brushes combs and oily bottles, and they hurt him, and he roared again and again. Finally he sat up in the midst of the scattered goods and stared.
"You howling guy!" he roared.
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"You frozen chump!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"You burbling jabberwock!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
Fisher T. Fish staggered up. He was very dusty and very breathless and very angry. He had ruined a great deal of angry. He had rumed his stock by rolling on it.

"You frabjous cuckoo!" he growled. "You trablous cuckoo! he give you two isys the licking of your life, I guess!" "Go it!" said Johnny Bull cheerfully.

"Nope! I guess I'll let you off," said up my show, and interrupted my trade!" "I'll interrupt it again, and bump you harder, if you try it on again!" growled Johnny Bull wrathfully. "Do you think I'm going to have my study turned into a swindling barber's saloon?" "It ain't going to be a swindle!" said Fish heatedly. "I'm cutting hair at low prices. I'm doing the Remove a good turn by competing with these swindling profiteers!"

"You'd better take a shop in the vil-lage, then," said Johnny Bull drily.
"You can't do it here!"
"I guess—"
"If you guess that you can use my

"If you guess that you can use my study for a store, you guess wrong," said Bull. "Now, gather up all that rot and scoot !"

I guess-"Are you going to make a start, you howling duffer?"

nowing duffer."

"But I tell you Wharton and Cherry and Nigent and Inky and Linley and all the other, sill jays know all about it." howled Fisher T. Fish. "They told me to go shead, and in a few minutes half the silly guys in the Remove will be coming along here to get their hair cut," "Oh!"

"Don't you know that Quelchy has ordered everybody to get their mops cut to-day? I guess these galoots ain't pay-ing a bob a time for it. I'm going to do it for fourpence." "But you don't know anything about

"But you don't and it, you frabjous ass!"
"I guess I do."
Johnny Bull and Field exchanged.

"Are we going to put up with it?" said Field, after a pause. "Well, if Wharton is going to get his hair cut here. I-"

"Oh, my stars and stripes!" howled Fish. "Haven't I told you that he's coming along? They'll be here soon, and now you've wrecked my blessed shop! Look at that brilliantine running over the rotten carpet!" You-you-

"You—you—"
"Oh, get out!" cried the Yankee junior. "I guess you've got cobwebs all over you, you galoot!" Fisher T. Fish groped about and gathered up the combs and brushes and safety-razors and bottles, and placed them on the table again, and Johnny
"Here they come!" said Fish, as footstare were heard in the passage outside.

"Here they come!" said Fish, as root-steps were heard in the passage outside. "You guys can clear off! You've done enough blessed damage in here." "I'll jolly well go and see Wharton!" said Bull. "And if he doesn't know any. thing about it I'll-I'll scrag you till you're blue, Fishy!"

THE FIFTH CHAPTER. Bad for Skinner.

ON'T move!" Make room, there!" "Order! "Rats

"Take it calmly," said Tom Redwing. "There's room for all, you know

"Oh, really, Redwing, that's all very well!" grumbled Billy Bunter. "All very well for you long-legged bounders!

But what about me? I can't see over and discussing the notice put up by the placing his mouth an inch off Dutton'r you!" Well, you watch me," said Tom Redand laugh when I do.

wing, "and "Oh, really-"Ring off, you fat dummy!" snapped Redwing.

There was an excited crowd of Re-movites round the school notice-board. Fisher T. Fish's announcement had been spotted, and in less time than it takes to tell a wild rush had been made for the board in order to read; mark, learn, and normally digest whatever the Yankee junior had pinned up. "If you duffers shut up," shouted Bul-strode, "I'll read it out!"

"Go ahead!"

And the Remove looked and listened. The notice, which had been hastily drawn up by Fisher T. Fish, was sur-prising, to say the least. The Remove had not known quite what to expect; but they certainly had not expected this:

" NOTICE!

"'The firm of Fish. Limited, is opening a hairdressing saloon in Study No. 14, Remove passage, this afternoon (Wednesday) needay).

"All kinds of hair will be cut at extremely low prices. Prefects and Sixth-Formers schared at moderate prices. Shampoos extra. False hair supplied by arrangement. Hair lotions, etc., obtainfirm. Walk up in your thousands!

"'Opening day, Wednesday afternoon, No profiteering! Fellows in the Remove are invited to roll up in their thousands, and support home industries. and support nome industries.

""Walk up! Walk up!

"Cheap and good. Cash only taken!
Anybody asking for credit will be ejected!

Anybony
"This is the offer of the season!
"Kieff of the season!
"Kieff of the season!
"Managing Director."

The Removites listened and stared and commented. Their comments were not at all favourable to the firm of Fish, at all tarourance to the mind.

"My only hat!" said Tom Redwing.

"The cheek!"

"Oh, Fish has got cheek enough for anything!"

"Oh, Fish has got cheek enough for anything!"

"Ob, Fish bas mother to the mind of "The Head will come down on it," said Dick Rake. "It will bust up before he hears of it, I expect," remarked Monty Newland.

"I don't know," said Alonzo Todd.
"If Fish is really going to cut hair cheaply it might be worth while."

"You'd only look a giddy scarecrow when he had finished with you!"

"Well, I think it might be tried. After all, Mr. Quelch was very angry about our appearances, and if Fish is really going to try to defeat those wretched profiteers I think we might give him a trial and see how it works."

"Something in that," said Tom Brown. "Blessed if I can afford a whole bob just for a hair-cut! Those barbers in Courtfield and Friardale are rotten thieves "He'll make a profit somehow!"

snorted Bolsover. "Trust that blessed Yank! He'll try to sell us rubbish when he's cut our hair, and he'll make big profits in that way."

"Faith, and ye're right!" said

"He'll probably shove something on to our nappers and give us blood-poison-ing!" growled Morgan.

For a long time there was a crowd before the board, reading and re-reading, Yankee junior.

Yankee junior.

In spite of themselves, the Removites could not help being impressed by the initiative and cool cheek of the American. There was no doubt that Fisher T. Fish, in spite of his many little failings, was a businesslike and energetic youth, and the Remove began to veer round

"After all, a bob's a bob in these times," said Harold Skinner. "When you come to think of it, why should these beastly profiteers take our money off us like that?"

"That's what I say, my dear Skinner," said Alonzo Todd. "I'm quite sure my Uncle Benjamin would with us to encourage one of our own schoolfellows in any serious attempt to perform a good action

"Good old Uncle Benzoline!" laughed Wibley "I shall certainly patronise Fish, for ne," continued Alonzo Todd. "Will one," continued Alonzo 1006.

you join me, Brown?"
"I'll-I'll come up with you."
"And so will I," said Skinner. "Will you come and get your hair cut, Dutton?" vou

Dutton ! The deaf junior of Grevfriars stared

The deaf junior of Greyfrians stared at Skinner.
"Do I know your Aunt Haricot?" he exclaimed. "Of course I don't! I do not know any of your relations."
"Oh, my giddy hat!" gasped Skinner.
"Just hark at this deaf lunatie!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"I think it's most extraordinary of you to ask me such a question," con-tinued the deaf junior. "How the dickens do you think I could have met your blessed aunt?"
"I didn't say anything of the sort."
"What's hat?" What has she bought?" "I wish you would speak up, Skinner," said Dutton. "I'm only a trifle hard of hearing, and you needn't shout; but don't manually you needn't shout; but nearing, and you needn't shout; but don't numble your speech so."

"Ha, ha, ha!" roared the Removites.
"Are you coming up to Study No. 14 to get your hair cut!" bawled Skinner,

Tom Dutton smiled. "Yes, rather, Skinner! I've quity made up my mind to patronise Fish of this occasion."

"Well, come along, then, you frabjory

Harold Skinner broke away from the crowd of Removites, and Dutton and Brown and Alonzo Todd followed on his heels, and they made their way along to the end study in the Remove passage. They met Johnny Bull and Field a few yards from No. 1, and the two mem-few yards from No. 1, and the two members of that notorious study were looking very cross. They had just stamped out of the room after their angry interview with their study-mate, and they glared at Skinner and his party as they passed. "Fish at home!" saked Skinner. "Yes!" growled Field. "Yes!" growled Field. They have a summarks in the passeg, and he poked his head round head to the passeg, and he poked his head round.

the door.

"Come along, you jays!" he cried
"The saloon is now open. Those silly guys have mucked things up a bit, but I'm ready to cut hair, shave, or shamnoo!"

Skinner and Todd and Dutton and Tom Brown walked into Fish's saloon, and gazed about them in some surprise.

gazed about them in some surprise.
"Now," said the Yankee, smiling pleasantly, "what can I do for you, Skinner? A nice hair-cut, or perhaps you would like to try a shave?"
Tom Brown and Alonzo Todd tittered.
"A shave sometimes does it.

Tom Brown and Alonzo Todd tittered.
"A shave sometimes does the face a lot of good. It keeps down the bumps and all that sort of thing," continued the Yankee. "Come on, you jsy, squat down here and try a shave!" "You-you-

"You—you—
"Then try a hair-cut? Old Quelchy got very stuffy about your hair this morning. I only charge fourpence a time, and I'll cut it in any style you wish

"A hair-cut's a hair-cut, isn't it? What blessed style do you think I want? I'm not a blessed Chinaman! Anyway, I'm not going to be first. Try Brown, or Todd, or Dutton. I think Dutton had petter go first. He can't hear a blessed !

PICTURES!

HUNDREDS OF

A Grand School Story appears in "This "GEM." Price 12d. Order Now.

word!" "Right, sir!" said Fish. "This way, Who is jolly well swaying?" snapped Duttor "This way, please!" howled Fish. "I guess I didn't say apything about swaying. You'd better get your ears seen to. Try an ear specialist for a change!"

to. Try an ear specialist for a change!"
"What are you talking about, you rotter?"

The Yankee Removite stared hard at the deaf junior, for Dutton had suddenly adopted a pugilistic attitude, and he adopted a pugilistic attitude, and he very threatening manner.

very threatening manner.
"Now, then, you silly guy!" cried
Fish. "I guess I don't want any nonseason in my saloon!" want any nonseason in my saloon!" howled the Yankee.
"You think so, do you?" cried Datton.
Then you can jolly well take that!"
Tom Dutton's left shot out, and caught Fisher T. Fish a sharp blow on his long nose, and he went down on the study carpet with a bump.

Vow

"Ha, ha, ha!"
Tom Dutton danced excitedly around the unfortunate director of Fish Limited, who was holding his swellen nose in both hands, and making enough noise to attract half the Remove to the spot if attract half the Remove to the spot in they had been in the passages.

"Ow! Yow! You silly galoot!"

"Ha, ha, h!" roared the Removites.

"That will teach the rotter to call me baboon!" exclaimed Tom Dutton.

"I've never heard such check! A blessed Yankee talking to me like that I

"Oh, Dutton, you howling jackass!" laughed Tom Brown. "Fish never said anything about it at all !"

Eh! "Sit down, for goodness' sake, old chap!" shouted Skinner. "Come on, Fishy, you idot! It's no good wasting time making that row. If nobody is going to have a hair-out, I'll try a sham-poo. "You can't do any damage at that !"

"Oh, my stars and stripes!" howled Fish, clambering up. "I wish to good-ness they would lock that dangerous lunatic up in a blessed asylum! He's not lunatic up in a bissed asymm! He's not safe to be about without a keeper, the silly guy! Just look at my nose!"

"Oh crumbs! It's about twice the

"The silly jabberwock! I—I guess I'll deal with him later. Come this way, Skinner!"

The Yankee junior conducted Harold Skinner into the chair placed in front of the cracked mirgor, and Skinner sat

"What's that dirty bowl for?"

"I guess you put your face over that," replied Fish, throwing the towel round Skinner's neck and shoulders. "This prinner's neck and shoulders. "This here saloon is absolutely up-to-date, and the beauty of it all is that there's no blessed profiteering. Let me see now, you said a shampoo, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"That'll be tuppence, I guess." "What?"

"Tuppence, please. No credit here, and money in advance!"

"You you silly fathead?" cried Skinner. "I'll pay you the blessed money when you've finished the job. Have you ever heard of anybody paying a barber in advance?" "Nope! But I guess this place is up-to-date Harold Skinner scowled, and drew out wo pennies from his trousers-pocket, and flung the coins on to the table in front of him. THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 607.

"There you are, you beastly grabber!" he growled.
"Right, sir!" said Fisher T. Fish. "I guess I'll go right ahead now. Sit down, Brown and Todd, and tell that lopsided jay Dutton he can do the same. I'm not sking anything more with him."

The Yankee Removite took a bottle ff the table. It was one of the many he off the table. on the table. It was one or the many he had borrowed from the Fifth Form dormitory, and one of the few which had survived the attack made upon the table by the indignant study-owners. Fish took the cork out of the neck, and pressed Skinner's head over enamelled basin in front of him.

"Look out, you ass!" hooted Skinner. don't want you to dislocate my T 33

I guess that'll be all right if you keep quiet and close your eyes."

The bottle in Fish's hand was inverted, and a stream of liquid spurted out and a stream out a stream of liquid spurted out and a stream out and a stream out a stream out and a stream out a stream out a stream out and a stream out a stre flowed down Skinner's greasy hair. rubbed his bony fingers into the middle of it, and the next instant there was a wild shriek from Skinner.

"Yaroooh! What is it?"
"Hi! Look out!" bawled Fish, as the bottle slipped out of his hand and the contents went flowing down Skinner's

"Ow!"
Harold Skinner leapt up from the chair, shrieking like a madman, and holding his head frantically in both hands.
"Yow! He's poisoned me!" he yelled. "Police! Help! The rotter's burning me to death!"

Tom Brown jumped up in alarm.

Read

"THE FAG'S HONOUR !"

Wonderful Complete Story of TOM MERRY & CO. at St. Jim's,

By MARTIN CLIFFORD, in

"THE GEM."

Out This Wednesday.

Yow!"
"I_I_I_I guess—"
"It's full-strength ammonia for the bath!" gasped Tom Brown, looking at the label on the bottle. "You—you how!, the laber on the bottle. "You you howling dummy, it'll half burn his head off!"
"Take him up to the bath-room, Toddy!" cried Tom Brown. "Buck up! Put his head under the cold tap!"

Alonzo Todd and Tom Dutton sprang to action, and caught the howling Skin-ner by both arms and dashed him out of ner by both arms and dashed him out of the study, shricking for all he was worth. "You silly rotter!" cried Tom Brown. "You jolly well ought to be locked up on a desert island, and then I don't believe you'd be safe!"

I guess ..."

"Brerverre !"

growled Bolsover.

"I guess Hallo! Come right in, Bolsover! No waiting! That silly guy Skinner lost his head, and—"

"Oh, you idiot!" roared Tom Brown.
"Oh, you idiot!" roared Tom Brown.
"I should think he jolly nearly did lose his head! I'm hanged if I'm going to risk anything here!" Bolsover can do so if he likes!"

And Tom Brown, full of indignation, brushed past Percy Bolsover as the bully of the Remove entered the little study.

THE SIXTH CHAPTER. Bolsover Takes the Plunge!

DERCY BOLSOVER came in, and PERCY BOISOVER came in, and scowled at Fisher T. Fish as the Yankee junior tidled up the table containing the goods and chattels of his hairdressing salcom.

"What's up with that ass Skinner?"

"I guess-"
"What's he making all that row for?

"What's he making all that row for?"
Can't you answer a straight question without all that rotten guessing?" Skinner's a silly guy!" replied Fish
"Skinner's a silly guy!" replied Fish shampoo, and when go han one a shampoo, and when go han one be expected to the ground!"
"Oh!"" Oh !

"What can I do for you? I guess business is a bit quiet. Those galoots don't know a good thing when it's before them. They don't want to pay a bob for a hair-cut, and when I offer to cut their hair for fourpence a time they shy at hair for fourpence a time they shy at that. They're a rotten, stingy lot!"

"What do you know about hair-cut-ting?" snapped Bolsover.

"Whole piles, I guess!"

"Where did you learn to cut hair?"

"I_I_"

"I-I-

"You don't know a blessed thing about it!" snapped the bully of the Remove. And yet you have the cheek to ask the chaps to brass up fourpence a time whilst you learn the job on their nappers!"

Fisher T. Fish frowned.

"If you don't like it, I guess you can pay a bob and get it cut in the village!
Quelchy will be down on you like a load of bricks in the morning. And I guess he's right every time. Your hair hasn't been touched for months!"

"You-you cheeky Yank! Don't you talk to me like that, or I'll jolly well bump you! Will you cut my hair for tuppence?" Nope!"

"For threepence?

"Nothing doing!"
Percy Bolsover scowled at the American junior wrathfully.
"Well, then, will you cut it properly

Bolsover held the unfortunate Yankee's head in chancery, and Fisher T. Fish yeiled for help. "Look at me!" roared Bolsover, facing Harry Wharton & Co., who were thoroughly enjoying the scene. "Look at my hair!" (See Chapter 7.) (See Chapter 7.)

if I pay you fourpence, you thieving

"Yep! Of course I will! Money down in advance!"

The bully of the Remove pulled out a handful of coins and counted out four pennies, and threw the money on to the table.

"Right, sir," said Fisher T. Fish. "I guess I'll go ahead! Just take a chair right here, will you?"

Bolsover threw himself into the chair lately vacated by the shricking Skinner, and Fish tucked the towel round the bully's collar. "Any particular style?" remarked Fish, eyeing the bully's shaggy head with quite a professional air.

"Cut it properly!" snapped Bolsover. "That's all I want you to do, and that's what I've paid my money for !"

"Right, sir. We'll try one side first, and see how you like it!"

Fisher T. Fish ran his fingers through Bolsover's hair and then picked up a pair of scissors and a comb from the table.

"Go carefully with those blessed scissors!" snapped Bolsover,

"You keep quiet, and you won't know I'm at work, I guess!"

The comb was run through the hair, and then Fish made a cut at a tangled mass of hair, and Bolsover's locks com-menced to fall to the floor of the study.

Bolsover was not a very pleasant-looking individual. He had a sort of fixed scowl on his features, and his hair was a strange, mousy colour, and taking it all round he was not a very prepossessing member of the Remove Form at Grey-But that didn't matter to Fisher T. Fish. All was grist that came to the mill as far as he was concerned, and he set to work now in real earnest, Bolsover could catch a glimpse now and again of his head in the little cracked mirror hung up opposite him, and he watched his flowing locks being chopped off in a very heroic manner indeed.

"Ow !" he cried suddenly. "What do you want to jab those beastly scissors into my head for?"

& That's all right, sir, I guess!"

Bolsover scowled harder than ever; but he did not pursue the matter, and so Fish plodded away on the right-hand side of his customer's shaggy head

"I guess your hair is full of scurf, Bolsover !"

"Shut up!"

"And your hair is as dry as a tinder !" "Get on with that beastly cutting! Ow! Look out!"

"Right, sir !" Clip, clip, clip! Hair fell down over the towel on Bolsover's shoulder in a steady stream, and Fish was beginning to get thoroughly warmed to his work, when Vernon-Smith strolled into the study, and stared with great interest at the operation. "Hallo!" he cried. " How's the bizney getting on, Fishy?"

"I guess it's going strong," replied the Yankee junior, blowing a gust of wind down Bolsover's neck, and bringing forth a howl from the bully in consequence.

Bolsover did not seem to appreciate this THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 607.

see Skinner?" asked "Have you see Skinner?" asked Vernon-Smith, with a laugh. "The silly ass said he was coming back to Study 4, and that was about an hour ago.

Fish paused at his hair-cutting for a moment, and gazed across the study at Vernon-Smith "I guess Skinner was here about ten minutes ago. The silly jay has gone up to the bath-room !

The whatter?" "The bath-room!" snapped Fish. "And I hope the silly jay stops there for a bit, too a hit, too!"

"Thanks," said Vernon-Smith, apparently puzzled. "I've been looking all over the beastly place for him."
And Skinner's study-mate strolled out of Fish's hair-cutting saloon, and tramped down the Remove passage.

Clip, clip, clip!

The seissors snapped away merrily, and one side of Bolsover's head was beginning one suc of Doisover's nead was beginning to look like a sooty bladder of lard.

"Here, go steady!" growled the bully, as he caught a glimpse of himself in the cracked mirror. "I want a hair-cut, not a blessed shave, you know!"

"It's beginning to look the real thing, Bolsover. I recommend you to have a shampoo when I've finished. My stars, I guess I'm beginning to get cramp in my stars and I'm scissors hand Dry up, and get on with the job!"

But Hallo! That's Wharton's

"Butvoice, or I'm a Dutchman!

Harry Wharton's voice floated down the passage, and he was calling out Fish's name with all the force of his lungs. "Wharton can jolly well wait!"

snapped Bolsover. "Fish! Fish! duffer? Fish!" Where's that silly

Tramp, tramp, tramp!
Harry Wharton & Co. were evidently coming along the Remove passage, and calling out Fish's name as they went.

The Yankee junior stepped across the study and flung open the door, and looked down the corridor. "I'm here, you jays!" he shouted.

"Will you come and finish my hair?

bawied Bolsover angrily from inside the "Let that ass Wharton jolly well study. wait until you've done with me Fish came into the study, followed by Harry Wharton & Co., and the newcomers gazed in amazement at the startling appearance of the bully of the Remove as he sat scowling in the chair

"Oh, crumbs!" gasped Harry Wharwith Bolsover?"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"My only aunt!" laughed Bob Cherry. He looks like the giddy White Eyed (affir! Have you ever seen such a Kaffir! sight?

"I guess I've only done one side of the when I've finished."

"Well, Fishy, we're going now!" laughed Harry Wharton. "I thought you said you wanted to come down to Courtfield with us when we went. I'm blessed if I'm going to wait whilst you blessed if I'm going to wate minish that dummy's hair, though."
"It won't take long."
"Shut up gassing," snapped Bolsover,

"and get on with the other side!" "Well, we'll go on, Fishy," said Harry Wharton.

"I guess I'm coming with you!" exclaimed the Yankee junior. Twe got cramp in my scissors hand. I can't finish this guy just now. I'll do the other side The MAGNET LIBBARY.—No. 607.

little professional trick from the Grey- of your nut when I come back, Bolsover, friars barber.

And Fisher T. Fish put his scissors and comb down on the table as he spoke. Bolsover leapt out of his chair with

THE SEVENTH CHAPTER.

Very Awkward for Bolsover. OU'LL jolly well stop here!"
shrieked Bolsover.
"I guess I've got cramp in my— Hi! Hands off!"

Bolsover leapt forward, and caught the Vankee's head in chancery, and Fisher T. Fish velled for help. "I'll punch you till you won't know yourself!" roared Bolsover. "Do you yourself!" roared Bolsover. "Do you think I'm going to let you go off now when you've only out one side of my hair?" "Leggo, you galoot!"

"Look at me!" roared Bolsover, facing Harry Wharton & Co., who were thoroughly enjoying the scene. "Look thoroughly enjoying the scene. at me, I say !"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Oh, my stars and stripes!" shrieked Fish. "Help me Wharton, you jay! This chap's dragging my ears off!"

"I'll drag your head off, you Yankee "Yow!" roared Fish. "Lemme go!

I'll yell for-A cake of soap will stop that," said A cake or soap will stop that," said Bolsover, reaching his disengaged hand out and picking up a cake of soap from the table. "Now, too much row from you, you rotter, and I'll jam this into your mouth!"

"Ow! Help! Look here-Groo-o-o-o! Oh!"

Bolsover had carried out his threat. The cake of soap was jammed right into the open mouth of Fisher T. Fish as he expostulated, and his expostulations were changed in a moment into a wild and frantic spluttering.

frantic spluttering.
"Gr.-r-rororororororooooh!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
Harry Wharton & Co. yelled with laughter at the sight of Fisher T. Fish negotiating the soap. The Yankee could not extract it from his schoolboy mouth with his fingers, because Bolsover had fixed his arms behind him somehow. He spat and spluttered, and spluttered and gurgled and gasped to get rid of the soap, and the Removites shrieked.

"Gro-ooh!" gasped Fish, "By gum! Ow!"
"You ought to like that soap!" said

Bob Cherry. "Bolsover's given it to you for nothing, you know. That's good business, isn't it?"
"Ha be be to the state of the state of

"Ha, ha, ha!

"Groo-00-000!"

"Will you cut the other side of my nir, you Yankee bounder?" exclaimed olsover fiercely. "You've swindled me hair, you Bolsover fiercely. out of fourpence, and now you've got to finish the job!"

"I guess I'm going down to Courtfield with Wharton, and I've got barber's cramp in my scissors hand!"

"Do you mean to say you refuse to finish my hair ? "Surely!" said Fisher T. Fish, who, as he spoke the wonderful American language, always said "surely" when he meant "certainly."

"Then I'll jolly well shave one side of your blessed hair off!" roared the Remove bully. "Where's one of those Remove bully. rotten razors "Here, hold on!" shouted Harry Wharton, rushing forward Wharton, rushing forward.

He could see that Bolover was in deadly earnest, and it looked as though the Yankee unisor might get badly cit! stay! If you won't finish the job on my

"You mind your own blessed business, Wharton

"Let Fishy go!" "I'll see you hanged first, you inter-fering idiot!" roared Boisover, grasping a safety-razor from the table. "Now then, hands off !"

Harry Wharton had caught the enraged bully by the arm, and Bolsover made an effort to shake him off, and at the same time tried to keep Jish head in chancery. In both efforts he was us-successful. The Yankee wriggled wharton clung on to the bead free in a moment, but year, and and the next instant Bob Cherry and and the next instant Bob Cherry and Frank Nugent pounced on to the back of the struggling Bolsover. The juniors went to the floor with a crash, and they went to the floor with a crash, and they rolled over and over in a whirling mass. "Hold him!" gasped Harry Wharton. "My hat! The rotter is as strong as an Bolsover's boot caught Fish under the chin, and the Yankee junior went staggering to the door. And the next moment the bully of the Remove shook himself free from Harry Wharton & Co., himself free from Harry and scrambled up.

"If that blessed heathen is going to leave my hair half finished I'll teach him a lesson!" roared Bolsover. "I'll smash up his beastly shop! "I guess you'll leave those-

"I'll begin by chucking the bounder's rubbish out!" roared Bolsover. "If you stand by that blessed door you'll get hurt, you Yankee rotter!"

"You'd better not touch a thing!" snapped Fish. "I—" Biff!

A stiff brush caught Fish under the A sum brush caught Fish under the chin. He staggered back, and then rushed furiously into the study. Ho caught his foot in Frank Nugent's back. caught his foot in Frank Nugent's back, and stumbled, and Bolsover caught him just as he reached the floor, swung him round, and whirled him through the door again. "Yar-ooh! Oh! Ow!"

Crash!

Fish landed on the opposite wall, and slid down to the floor of the passage. Then Bolsover began to throw out Then Bolsover began to throw out Fisher T. Fish's valuable borrowed stock, which he irreverently called rubbish. Brushes and combs rained rubbish. upon Fish, and he jumped up and fled, followed by safety-razors and cakes of soap, and a special cheap line in brilliantine The chums of the Remove, in spite of themselves, roared as he fled. The passage was soon littered with Fisher T. Fish property. Fisher-T. Fish roared, too, but in a different way. But he was not able to save his valuable goods.

Bolsover soon made a very great clearance. He got rid of the goods faster than Fisher T. Fish had collected them, and the Yankee junior looked on, raving and waving his hands. "All gone, you rotten bully!" said Bob Cherry, as Bolsover looked round, after hurling the last of the shaving-tackle into the passage. "Good!" roared Bolsover. "The "Good!" roared Bolsoyer. The merchandise is gone, and now the rotten barber can follow it! Out you go, you blessed Yank!" "Nope! I—"

"Nope!

"Outside!"

"Look here! I guess-"
"Out you go!" roared Bolsover.

There was a momentary struggle, and Fisher T. Fish went flying out of his own study again. He rolled along the passage amid his scattered properties, and roared. " Ow !"

hair you don't come back into this study again whilst I'm at Greyfriars!"
"I guess it's my own study!" yelled Fisher T. Fish.

gisner T. Fish.

"You won't come back, all the same, till you promise to finish cutting my hair!" said Bolsover.

I guess-

"Oh rats!"

"Look here, Wharton, you jay! I guess I'm coming down to Courtfield with you guys! Just hold that galoot with you guys! Just hold that galoot whilst I put these things back!"
"Ha, ha, ha!"
Fisher T. Fish started to pick up the scattered goods on the floor of the passage.

"He's not coming in here!" roared Bolsover. "Not until he's promised to finish the other half of my hair-cut!"

"I guess I'll do that when I come back" back."

"I'll smash up this blessed study if you don't finish it now!" roared Bolsover.

"I don't care a hang for you. Whatrol! If you lay a hand on me I'll knock you down! Now, you rotten Yank, are you going to finish my bair-cut?!"

"Nope! I guess I'm not!"

"Then I'll smash up the happy home !' "You'll get outside, you dummy!" cried Harry Wharton. "This study belongs to Johnny Bull and Squiffy Field as well as Fish!"

I don't care a hang!"

"Come on, you fellows!" cried Harry Vharton. "Let's chuck the bounder Wharton. out before he does any more harm!"

The Removites responded with a and in a moment they had the bully of the Form squirming and roaring on the study carpet.

Fisher T. Fish seized the golden oppor tunity offered him, and he picked up his scattered goods with feverish haste, and dashed into the study and threw them on to the table again. "Leggo!" roared Bolsover.

"Rats!

"Ow! Let me get at that rotten Yaukee! I'll-I'll scrag him till he's blue! Hi! Look out!"

Bolsover was raised high in the air by the stalwart Removites, and the next moment he went whirling through the doorway, and met the passage floor with a terash Bump! "Yaroop!"

"Come on, Fishy, you bounder!" cried Harry Wharton. "Lock the blessed door and make a run for it."

Fisher T: Fish was ready, and the door of the end study was slammed to with a bang, and the key was turned and jerked

"Come on!" cried Bob Cherry, as Bolsover sat up, gasping. "Make a run for it!

And Harry Wharton & Co. and the American junior disappeared down the passage before Bolsover had time to take the situation in.

THE EIGHTH CHAPTER.

Disappointing for Bunter.

ROAN!

"Hallo! I guess that's Bunter in some sort of trouble." Fisher T. Fish had just re-turned from his visit to Courtfield, and he had entered the gates of Greyfriars, and heard a groan. And he stopped in astonishment. Fish had two enormous parcels wrapped up in brown paper, and a parcel was tucked under each of his arms.

Groan !

Bunter, what's the matter?" Groan !

The American junior, somewhat alarmed, hurried in the direction of the sound. Billy Bunter was leaning up against the trunk of one of the old elms, with his fat features twisted up into an expression of anguish. He blinked through his big spectacles at Fisher T. Fish as he approached. The Yankee Removite was surprised. Billy Bunter was a champion malingerer, and few fellows ever believed in any of his state-ments, and if he had anything the matter, he exaggerated it so much that the most sympathetic fellow in the Remove was tired of sympathising with him. But the groans he was giving now sounded so realistic that Fish feared for the moment that there was something really the matter. "What's the matter, Bunter?" Groan !

"Bunter, you jay, I guess-"
A deeper groan!

Are you ill?" exclaimed Fisher T.

"Not exactly ill!" gasped Bunter.

MAGNIFICENT NEW

Long, Complete Stories HARRY

WHARTON & CO. AT GREYFRIARS

SCHOOL appear every Friday in

THE PENNY POPULAR

BUY YOUR COPY TO-DAY!

"What's the trouble?"

"I—I can hardly explain. I've got something on my mind. I hope you'll be a little sympathetic, Fish, old chap. I'm in trouble, and I want bucking up." The sharp American junior thought he understood.

"Oh, I guess you say you want bucking up, ch?"
"Ye-es."

"Ye-es."
"I suppose what you need is a feed—aiolly big feed?"
Bunter's face, brightened up wonderfully, and he blinked very knowingly at the two great parcels Fisher T. Fish had tucked away under his arms. "Yes, that's it?" he said eagerly. "A jolly good feed, you know. When a chap's down in the dumps there's nothing like a good feed to buck him up, is there, Fish, old man? I've heard you say that yourself before new. "I guess I may have done."

"That's just how I am now—awfully down, and I need a good feed to buck me up," said Billy Bunter. "I'm sure you'll do the right thing, Fish, especially as you've just come back from Court-somewhat field with those two whacking big percess of grue.

Fisher T. Fish grinned.

"Surely I will!" he replied.

"Thank you!" moaned Bunter. "A really good feed is what I want. I should feel all right then. Oh, ch! I haven't a sou in the wide world at present, and I shall catch it hot and strong from old Quelchy in the morning!"

"I can't raise a bob for a blessed haircut, you know; and on top of all this

"Bad news from home?" asked Fish suspiciously. "Well from one of my titled friends."

"Well, from one of my titled friends," said Bunter. "And-and I want cheer-ing up. And a jolly good feed is the best way to cheer a fellow up, you know." "I guess you're right!". "I-I'm ready!" said Bunter. "I-I think I've got strength enough to walk to the tuck-shop."

"I guess you could raise enough strength for that. What would you fancy to eat, Bunter? Rabbit-pie, I guess, to begin with?" "Yes, yes! egin with?
"Yes, yes!"
"And then some pork chops?"
"Oh, ripping!"
"After that, I guess, a cake?"
"That would be splendid!".

"Then some jam-tarts tuppenny ones, and some cream-puffs?" Fisher T. Fish suggested Bunter's mouth watered. "I say, Fish, old man, that's ripping of you!" he said.

"Not at all. You haven't got 'cm yet. I guess you think that if you had all those things you'd be all right?"

"I'm sure of it!"

"Good! Then I guess I hope you'll te 'em!" said Fisher T. Fish sharply. I'm off, you guy! Jevver get left!" "Eh?"

"You silly jabberwock; you'd better raise a bob from some jay and go and get your hair cut in Courtledd. I guess old Quelchy will be down on you like a ton of bricks temorrow morning. If you haven't had it dome. If you had any sense in your fat head you'd only spend fourpence, and let me do, it for you?"

And Fisher T. Fish tucked the parcels more securely under his arms and strolled away. Billy Bunter blinked after him in amazement at first, and then in fury. He found strength to leave the tree he was leaning upon, and dashed after the Yankee junior as fast as his fat little legs. could carry him. "I say, you beastly Yank-" he bawled. "Oh, scat, Bunter!"

"Look here, you rotten Yankce swindler-"Buzz off!" roared Fish.

But what about that feed?"

"What feed?"

"The feed you've got in those two parcels, and that you're going to stand Fisher T. Fish looked astonished.

"I guess I ain't standing you any feed, you jay!" he replied. "What put that idea into your head?"

"Why, you-you-you said-"
"Oh, my stars and stripes! You've got cobwebs on your imagination!"

"You said jam-tarts and cream-puffs and pork chops!" yelled Bunter.

"I guess I was asking you what you'd like !" said Fisher T. Fish.

"Look here, you rotter!" shrieked Bunter. "Don't you try any of your beastly American ideas on me. It won't wash! You-you're jolly well going to stand me a feed now, or I'll know the reason why !"

Fisher T. Fish stopped, and a curious THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 607.

expression came over his sharp face as a brilliant idea evidently struck him.

-"Look here, Bunter, you guy! If you really want a feed I guess I'm your man!" man!" "Eh!"

"Come along up to the end study, and I gaess we'll talk the matter over. You can understand from the word Go' that you don't get grub for nix. I ain't that sort of guy!"
"Why what do you mean?"

"Why what do you mean?"
"You'll have to jolly well earn it!
Follow me, you jay!" Billy Bunter followed on the heels of the American junior as Fisher T. Fish stepped off at a brisk pace in the direction of the school building. "Shall I help you to carry one of those parcels, Fishy?"

"Nope "I'll take one if you like, old man.

I'm feeling stronger now."
"I guess you'll break it, you jay!"
"Oh no, I won't!" replied Billy Bunter. "I'm always jolly careful when sunter. I m always joily careful when I carry parcels of tuck, you know. It sounds as though you've got plenty of jam-puffs there, if you're so jolly afraid they'll get broken."

"Ring off, and follow me!"

"Ring off, and follow me!"
The two metered the school building,
and two metered the school building,
and two metered the school building,
and two meters of the school building,
and two meters of the school building,
and the school building the school building to the school and the school building the school building, and the school building the Billy Bunter obliged with alacrity, and he handled the parcels with tremendous care as the American junior transferred them over to his charge.

"I've got 'em, Fish, old chap!

ahead!"
"Bon't you drop them, you galoot!"
"Bon't you drop them, you galoot!"
"No fear, Fishy! My hat, what a ripping lot of grub there is! You must have had a top-hole remittance, old man !" Fisher T. Fish grinned as he turned the key in the lock, and flung the study door

THE BEST AND LONGEST DETEC-TIVE TALES FOR FOURPENCE.

SEXTON BLAKE LIBRARY.

An Original and Thrilling Tale of Sexton Blake, Tinker, and Pedro. Telling of the reappearance of George Marsden

No. 93.-THE CASE OF THE SEA

An exciting and Clever Yarn of Sexton Blake, Tinker, and the Hon. John

No. 94.-THE AFFAIR OF THE DE-

Sexton Blake Appears Prominently in all the

No. 95.-THE KESTREL

Flyers," etc., etc.

Adventure of the Master

MOBILISED SOLDIER. A Strong and Stirring Story of Human Interest and Holding Power.

er, by the popular Author of Red Heart of the Incas," Case of the Transatlantic SYNDICATE.

Lawless

Another

Mummer "The " The

SIDE CROOKS.

No. 92.-THE BOY WITHOUT A

MEMORY.

expression came over his sharp face as a saide the remains of his borrowed toilet accessories, and which now littered the Bolsover's recent attack on them.

"Look out how you put that thing down, you jay !" cried Fish. "It'll break as easy as water rolls off a duck's back. Hi! Look out, you jay! You'll break her nose off!" Billy Bunter gasped in amazement at Fish's remark. "A-a nose?"

"Yep!" snapped Fish. "And you'll have her ears off as well if you ain't jolly careful!" "H-h-have you—you been murdering somebody?"

"You silly jay!"

Billy Bunter's face had gone quite white, and he stepped back from the two mysterious brown-paper parcels as though the wrappings concealed some horrible the wrappens secret.

"Oh, crumbs! I'm off!" gurgled the end up by doing something like that "You burbling jabberwock!" cr 'ish. "What's the matter with you? Fish. "What's the matter with you! guess I thought you said you wanted something to eat?"

"So I do, you rotter, and I thought believe you're trying to conceal some horrible crime, you Yankee rotter!"

"I guess you're right off the map,

"Well, why don't you open the beastly things, then? I can tell you I'm not jolly well going to waste my time up here inty wen going to wasse my time up nere if there isn't any grub attached to it!"
"I'll stand you a feed, I guess, if you'll undertake to help me, Bunter, you guy!"
"Are you trying to conceal the crime?"
whispered Bunter hoarsely. "You won't

People get hanged for that!"
Fisher T. Fish untied the string, and tor the brown paper from one of the parcels, and Billy Bunter gave a cry of open. parceis, and Billy Bunter rolled in, and Fish swept surprise as the contents stood revealed.

"My hat!" he gasped. "A blessed wax model of a woman's head!" "Ain't that simply ripping?" said Fish.

"I guess I've hired this for my hair-dressing saloon." You-you rotten swindler!" howled Sunter, as Fish untied the other parcel, and a bundle of old wigs tumbled out on to the study table. "You jolly well told me that you were going to stand me

ed. Do you think I'm going to eat blessed wigs?" a feed "Nope! I guess I'll give you a feed, Bunter, you jay, if you'll help me now. And I might even allocate you a percentange of the profits in this saloon.

"What have I got to do?" "There's plenty of grub in the cup-oard," explained Fish. "I guess I only want you to eat it.

Billy Bunter's eyes glistened, and a smile spread over his fat features as Fish explained things. The Owl, of the Remove had visions now of a feed, and this was always certain to make Bunter attentive.

"Shall we shove the stuff on to the

"Shall we shove the stuff on to the table. Fish, old chap?"
"Yop! I guess those "jays, Bull and Field, won't mind very much; but you ain't going to get it for nix, mind you."
"Well, what have I got to do, you didot?" cried Bunter. "Why don't you buck up and say?

"I guess you've only got to put one of these wigs on whilst I learn how to make up a lady's coffure from this wax model.

Billy Bunter blinked.

Is that all you want me to do?" "Yep! I guess that's all, and you can est away whilst I get moving on the wig. Just shove this one on for a start. Bunter. It's nice and long, and I guess can make it up all right. I've got plenty of hairpins.

"What's the good of learning this sort of work, you idiot? There aren't any ladies in the school who are likely to come to you to get their hairs done."
"Nope; I guess you're right, Bunter. But a barber has to learn the trade from A to Z. At least, that's what it means in the States. Here you are, you jay, shove this old wig on.

shove this old wig on."

Billy Bunter took the golden-haired wig from the Yankee jumor, and he drew it over his fat skull, and the flowing locks fell about his shoulders and down his back as far as his fat waist-or, rather, the spot where Bunter's waist should have been.

"That's fine, Bunter!"

That's fine, Bunter!"

Removite. "That's fine, Bunter! I guess it just suits your style of beauty!"

But what about the grub? "Come on, you guy, the grub's in this cupboard. I'll help you to put it out on to the table. Fisher T. Fish opened the study cupboard and commenced to hand the things out to the Owl of the Remove, "The gravy is first-class." said Half Fish.

Good! "Bread and marg, and a pot of jam."

"Ripping!"

"Oh, my hat!" said Bunter, throwing the things on to the table as fast as Fish handed them out. "Tin of sardines, opened last week," continued Fish. "I guess those galoois said they're rotten; but they're only a bit high."

bit high it high."
Billy Bunter sniffed at the tin.
"These "Oh, my hat!" he gasped. "These have seen life, Fishy! Shove 'em back.

old man Right! Here's some potted meat and some biscuits and a bottle of pop."

"Good!" "That's the lot," said Fishy, "except-

TALES OF SPORT, SCHOOL LIFE A'ND ADVENTURE IN THE BOYS' FRIEND LIBRARY.

No. 474.—THE FIGHTING FIFTH. Topping Yarn of Schoolboy Fun Adventure. By MAXWELL SCOTT.

No. 475.—THE CHAMPION OF THE DEEP.

Superb Swimming Story. By GEOFFREY

No. 476.-HOOP-LA! Thrilling Story of Circus Life. By HENRY T. JOHNSON.

No. 477.-THE LAND OF

MYSTERY. Magnificent Tale of Stirring Adventure, By ALEC G. PEARSON.

Price Fourpence per Volume

Everywhere.

Price COMPLETE STORY IN EACH NUMBER. Price

NOW ON SALE!

4d. Each.

Ask your Newsagent for them.

4d. Each.

over the place!"

ing for a bit of pork-pie. I guess that's been here nearly all the term. I shouldn't have that, Bunter. shouldn't have that, Bunter.
The fat junior shook his head.
"Not me, you idiot," he remarked.
"I'm not jolly well going to poison myself! Hang this beastly wig; it's all Keep the ends out of the iam, you guy!" Right ho, Fishy!" said Bunter, drawing up a chair for himself. "Til go ahead with this grub. I feel beastly faint, and you can work on my wig whilst I'm eating, can't you?"

"I guess that's all right," replied

Fish, standing the wax model of the head and shoulders of the beautiful lady on the corner of the table. "I'm going to do your nair nace sees or pretty!"

"Mmmmmmm!" went Billy Bunter, opening the attack on the food in real opening the attack on the food in real at the head and shouldors of the foodly lady standing on the study table. The lady's cheeks were a gorgeous rosy , and her waxen nose was a beauti tinge, and her waxen nose was a beautiful shape, and her big black eyelashes made her ayes look wondrous indeed. Eish gazed at the model, and then at the wing on Bunter's fat skull, whilst the fat junior champed merrily away;

"I guess I'll make a start," end Fish, gathering the golden locks of Bunter's wig up in his long fingers.

THE NINTH CHAPTER. Mr. Prout's Discovery !

ON'T wag your head about like that, you jay!"

Munch, munch, munch!
Billy Bunter munched away at the pie in great 'style, and quite ignored the schoolboy barber as he toiled ignored the sencolboy barber as he toiled away on the flaxen wig. Large masses of the golden locks were rolled up and unrolled, and Fish found it very hard to imitate the artistic finish of the hair to be to be to be to be a support of the barber of the beautiful waxen model standing on the study table.

"I guess that's really beautiful, Bun-ter," said Fish. "And I can see it's not going to be a simple matter to copy it." "Don't be all night over it!" "You keep quiet, Bunter. I guess

"You keep quiet, Bunter. I guess you've got enough grub there to keep you busy for some time."
"This blessed wig makes me hot!"
"Keen still you allow my Hard."

"Keep still, you silly guy! How the stars and stripes do you think I can do the hair properly if you talk so much?

I guess

There was a loud knock on the study door, and the handle turned, and Harry Wharton & Co. burst into the room. The Removites stopped and gazed at the amazing sight in astonishment.
"My only Aunt Semelina!" gasped "My only "rry Wharton,

Harry

"Get outside, you jays!"
"Hallo, hallo, hallo!" cried Bob Cherry. "What's the blessed Yank up to now? My hat! Look at Bunter!"

"Ha, ha, ha!"
"You bounders can get out!" growled Bunter, pausing between his mouthfuls for a moment. "Fish is going to make for a moment. "Fish is going to make me a partner in this hairdressing stunt of his, and we don't want you bounders in here!"

in here!"
"Eh?"
"I "guess Moses let me have these things on hire all right, Wharton," said Fish. "The silly galoot wouldn't do if for a long time; but I talked him round at last, and he let me have that model and tome wigs."

"What on earth do you want that blessed lady for? I thought you were going to cut our hairs for us at four-pence a time?"

"So I am," replied the Yankee iunior. here this evening. Old Quelchy will be fairly on the war-nath to-morrow "We've just been round to all the barbers, and they're all charging a bob a time," said Wharton.

a time," said Wnarton.
"Well, I guess it's cheap at fourpence a time," remarked Fish, commencing to work again on the golden locks adorning Bunter's head. "Now, then, keep ing Bunter's head. "Now, then, Keep your noddle still, Bunter, you galoot!" "Ha, ha, ha!" roared the Removites. Bunter certainly did look most extra-ordinary. The enormous golden wig on Bunter certainty dur aves in a cordinary. The enormous golden wig on his head made him look a ludicrous picture, and what added to the absurdity of the spectacle was the fact that the fat junior looked so remarkably serious as he attacked the pile of tuck in front of

"I guess the light's getting a bit bad for good work," said Fish. "You'll have to come over to the window, Bunter, and I'll fix the model there. I window, shall be able to see what I'm doing there

"Ha, ha! I think we'll leave these dummies to it!" laughed Harry Whar-ton. "Good-bye, Bunter!"

ton. "Good-bye, Bunter!"
But Billy Bunter only glared.
"Good-bye, Fishy, old bean! We'll come back when you've resumed haircutting. Ladies' golden wigs don't attract us, do they, chaps?"
"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed the Removites, as they trooped out of the little study.

"Come on, Bunter!" said Fish, locking the door. over to the window, and then I can see what I'm doing.

over to the window, and then I can see what I'm doing willed out of his chair, and whatever cuits Fish had fixed upcame uncurited, and the gloden hair fell about the fat Removite's fat shoulders in great masses. Fisher I. Fish gave the fat was pushed against the big open window, and the model use replaced close to Bunter's plate as soon as the fat Removing the second of the second with the second will be seen that the second will be seen that better!" said Fish. Now I can get on with it. "I wish you'd buck up!" mumbbed Bunter, opening a fresh thate's each great was the second with the second will be seen the second will be seen that the second wi

Now. just about the time the American junior dragged the table across the study, and seated Bunter at it right up against the open window. Mr. Paul study, and seated bunter at it right up against the open window. Mr. Paul Pontifex Prout, the portly Form-master of the Fifth, left his study in order to take a stroll round the quad. Mr. Prout had made a practice of this

Mr. Protit had made a practice of this little exercise for many years at Grey-friars School, and just before dusk at eventide one could sabolutely reckon upon seeing Mr. Prout's portly form adorning the grounds round the old school. He appeared as regularly as checkworks, and it mormater that junior always kept clear of the quadrangle at this hour. this hour.

The Fifth Form-master was ambling gently along the path under the elms, his hands folded behind his back, and a thoughtful expression on his face.

In his young days Mr. Prout had hunted the festive grizzly bear in his native lair in the Rockies. In those days the Fifth Form master had been a deadly shot with the rife-so Mr. Prout loved to relate to anybody who kind enough to listen to his old anecdotes.

and enough to listen to me old anecdotes.

The thoughts of those glorious old days made Mr. Prout happy and contented, and he loved to dwell upon them when he took his evening constitutional in the quadrangle of the old school.

Those glorious days became even more glorious as-the years rolled by, for as time went by Mr. Prout's great hunting expeditions grew more heroic and startling as his old exploits were seen through the mists of time.

And in those old days Mr. Prout had not entirely confined himself to duels with the grizzly bears. He had had his little romances with beautiful heroines; and at this moment the Fifth Form-master's mind was dwelling upon the lovely face he had once upon a time looked upon and had instantly lost his heart.

Mr. Prout sighed as he majestically paced up and down the shadowy path between rows of dark trees, and he had reached a very poetical stage in his reflections when he chanced to look up at the grey old towers of the school he The next moment the Fifth Form-master uttered a gasp, and he stopped in his stride with a sudden jerk. "Good heavens! What—on—earth— des—that—mean?"

Mr. Prout stared up at an open window belonging to that portion of the school allotted to the junior Forms, and what he saw completely flabbergasted "Why, bless my soul! Increases a boy up there combing a lady's hair!"

Mr. Prout could not believe his eyes.

Mr. blingldyimmed nince-nez from

Mr. Prout could not believe his eyes. He took his gold-rimmed pince-nez from his nose and wiped the glasses with his silk handkerchief, and then he put the glasses on again, and stared at the amazing sight again. "Why, goodness me!" gasped Mr.

Prout. The Fifth Form-master looked about the Fifth Form-master looked about him wildly, and suddenly caught a glimpse of Gosling, the school porter, wending his way acress the quadrangle in the direction of the woodshed.

in the direction of the woodshed.

Mr. Prout idin't know what to do.
Such a scene had never been known in the whole history of Greyfrars. For a junior boy to have two ladies in his study at this hour—why, if was beyondhis comprehension! Mr. Prout lost his head completely. He must get somebody else to look and find out whether his eyes had deceived him!

"Gosling!"
The old porter stopped, and looked round in the dusk of the evening.
"'O's that?" he said sourly.

"Gosling! Come here at once, Gos-ling, if you please!"

Mr. Prout was firm but polite, and the old porter walked towards the trees, and old porter walked towards the trees, and saw the Fifth Forn-master beckoning to him in a very excited manner. "Gosling! Come here, please!" "Wot's all the 'urry for, Mr. Prout?". "Gosling, I want you to see something.

"Gosling, I want you to see sometimes.
It is a most extraordinary thing, and I cannot properly understand it!"
Gosling blinked up at Mr. Prout in a very knowing manner. The old school Gosling blinked up avery knowing manner. The old school porter concluded that the Fifth Formmaster had been drinking something as the control of the control master had been drinking Something much too strong for him. Gosling had often done the same. In fact, Gosling was very familiar with the results to be obtained when insufficient water had been obtained when insumcrent water had oeen mixed with the gin, and Gosling thought be understood the situation now. If puzzled him greatly, nevertheless, for Mr. Prout was known to be a very abstemious man indeed. In fact, Gosling had always understood Mr. Prout to be a total ab-

"Orl right, Mister Prout!" said Gos-ling considerately. "Don't get hex-cited! Wot you oughter do was to put your 'ead hunder the cold-water tap for a few minutes."

"Gosling! What do you mean to infer, you scoundrel?"

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 607.

"Let me 'old yer arm, Mister Prout, study belonging to a boy in my Form? one. Keep quite quiet, if you please. I' and we'll 'ave a quiet little walk round Goodness me! My dear Prout, tell me am going to knock."

the grounds together!"

Mr. Prout stared at the school porter, ant then up at the window. The remarkable scene was still to be observed, and the Fifth Form-master grasped Gosling by the arm, and pointed his hand out excitedly in the direction of the open window

"Look!" cried Mr. Prout. "Look at that! A boy with two ladies in his study, and that boy attending to the toilet of one of—of those women!"

Gosling looked, and uttered a gasp.
"My 'at! Wot's it mean?"

"My 'at! Wot's it mean?"
"Can't you see, man? A boy breaking the strictest rule in the school's manage. A woman in his study, ment! having her hair done by-by one of the boys!"

My heye!" "Look-look! He's combing it out

"P'r'aps 'e's gorn mad!" gasped Gos-"Good heavens! What shall we do? "Good neavens: What shall we do:
These are extraordinary times we live in,
Gosling. Look, there's Mr. Quelch and Wingate just coming in! Run, Gosling!
Fetch them here at once! We must get more witnesses in this very remarkable case!"...

case!" "Right, Mister Prout!" Gosling set off towards Mr. Qu'elch and Wingate, the captain of the school. They had evidently just returned from a craik, and they stopped and turned as Gosling ambled up to them. "Mister Quelch, sir!" said Gosling excitedly. "Mister Prout 'e wants yer quickly, sir. "My word, wot! see is this ere. It'e never leard the likes of it!" "Only a stable way."

"Quick, sir, this way—you won't come to no arm!"

to no arm!"
"What's up, Gosling?" said Wingate sharply. "Don't talk that sort of rot to sharply. "Don't talk that sore of the Mr. Quelch. Here, where on earth are you off to?"

"Come along 'erc!" cried Gosling, ambling towards the row of elms where he had left Mr. Prout.

"Wa'd better go." muttered Mr. he had left Mr. Front.
"We'd better go," muttered Mr.
Quelch. "It seems to me that Gosling has been drinking again. Hallo! That's Mr. Frout's voice calling us."
when the seems to me that the seems of the seems of wards Mr. Frout, who was calling out to them to hurry. They reached the Fifth Form-master's side prifling and thewing. Gear Prout?" said Mr. Quelch. "Look, Quelch!" replied the Fifth Form-master, pointing up to the window again. "Look, my dear fellow! It's a most remarkable thing!" sate followed the

Mr. Quelch and Wingate followed the direction of Mr. Prout's outstretched arm, and the next moment they gave a arm, and the next moment they gave a cry of alarm.

"Goodness me!" said Mr. Quelch.

"Great Scott!" gasped Wingate.

"A couple of ladies in a boy's study!" exclaimed Mr. Prout.

"Why—why, bless me, he appears to be doing the hair of one of the—the women!"

women!

"Exactly !"

"The young himp must 'ave lorst 'is reason, hi should dare to suggest!" said Gosling. "The 'Ead will hexpel him for that, and no hexcuses, neither!"
"Look! He's doing it up in rolls!

gasped Mr. Quelch.
"My hat!" said Wingate e
"Shall I go up to the study, sir? said Wingate excitedly. one of the rooms in the Remove Form "Bless me !" gasped Mr. Quelch.

what you advise? Quickly, my dear

"We must go up at once," replied Mr. rout solemnly, "We-we must deal Prout solemnly, "We-we must deal with the ladies first, and see that they are escorted away from Greyfriars im-mediately; and then—then we will deal with the young rascal who has had the audacity to invite them into his study !"

THE TENTH CHAPTER.

The Last of the Schoolboy Barber!

"S HALL 1 come, Mr. Quelch?"
"Yes, Wingate, you must come by all means. As captain of the school, I think that it is essential for you to be present. What do you think, my dear Prout?"

"Yes, Wingate must come, and also Gosling." Gosling.

Yes, Mr. Prout." "You will bring up the rear, Gosling," said Mr. Prout, just as though he was in command of a battalion, and a regular hand-to-hand fight was to take place at any moment. "Is it 'eavy, sir?"

Mr. Prout stared at Gosling in sur-

"I don't understand you, man! What do you mean by asking me whether it is heavy? "You're to follow up behind us, Gosing," explained Wingate, as a puzzled expression settled down on the old porter's countenance. "Come on, sir! We're all ready. Lead on!"

"Very well, Wingate," said Mr. Prout. "Follow me; and you must understand, all of you, that this is a situation which demands a great deal of tact. I remember on one occasion, whilst hunting the grizzly bear-a particularly ferocious specimen-in the Rockies, I-" "Yes, yes, my dear Prout!" said Mr. Quelch, with a cough. "I think that it would be advisable to defer your anecdote for later on. I hardly think the present occasion warrants any delay. You must understand my agitation, considering that dreadful scene is being sidering that dreadful scene is being enacted in one of the studies belonging to a boy in my Form. The Remove

"Very well, my dear Quelch, I will finish that story later on. Follow me, all of you! I merely wished to emphasise the importance of tact when dealing with

"Ahem!" added Mr. Quelch.
And the party hurried across the quad. It was beginning to get quite dark now; but the little party attracted attention, and by the time it arrived outside the door of the end study it had been added to considerably. Gerald Loder of the to considerably. Geraid Loder of the Sixth had joined up, and enticed Win-gate to explain the party's mission. Horace Coker and George Potter of the Fifth were there, and Temple, Dabney, and Fry of the Upper Fourth followed at a respectable distance behind, and then again behind them Harry Wharton & Co. of the Remove looked on with great interest. They did not know what there was doing; but the fact of Mr. Quelch, the Form-master, and Mr. Prout. of the Fifth, being present, and looking very severe into the bargain, portended event of some considerable im-

Form "Hush!" said Mr. Prout, very mysteriously, as he tried the door of Study No.

14 and found it locked. "This is the

Tap! Mr. Prout rapped loudly, and Fisher

T. Fish's voice was heard quite plainly from the interior of the study.

"Hallo! I guess you can't come in!" Tap, tap!

Tap, tap!
"Sheer off, you silly galoot! If you want your blessed hair cut you'll have to wait, I guess!"
Mr. Prout gave a violent start, and he exchanged a glance with Mr. Quelch.

"Try again, my dear Prout." said the Remove Form-master. Tap, tap, tap!

"You silly, lop-sided jay, will you shut up making that blessed noise? I'm busy just now! I guess I'll cut your hair later

"Hi said the boy 'ad gorn mad!"
gasped Gosling, going quite white.
"And so 'e 'as. 'E thinks we want our 'airs cut. Oh, my heye!" "You must keep cool, Gosling!" snapped Mr. Prout. "There is nothing to fear whilst I am here! I will try again!"

Tap, tap, tap!
The Fifth Form-master rapped his knuckles violently on the study door, and the noise could be heard all the way down the noise could be heard all the way down the Remove Form passage.

"Clear off!" shouted Fish from within.
"I guess you're a silly, lop-sided glaoot if you jolly well can't understand plain English!" "It's Fish!" said Mr. Quelch.
"Fish!" cried Mr. Prout.

"Fish!" cried Mr. Prout.
"Oh, my stars and stripes!" exclaimed the Yankee junior. "I guess I'm sorry, Mr. Prout. Is that you, sit?"
"It is!" replied Mr. Prout sternly.
"And I might tell you that I have seen everything!".

"I have seen everything, and you will be dealt with most severely, Fish. I intend to show the proper respect due to ladies, however, and the the two ladies ladies, however, and the—the two ladies need fear nothing."

"What, sir?" cried Pish. The tone of his voice clearly showed he was exceedingly puzzled by the Fifth Fornmaster's cemarks.
"emarks."
"yellod Mr. Prout. "They will, however, be instantly escorted from the poy, replied Mr. Front. "They will, however, be instantly escorted from the precincts of the school buildings. Otherwise nothing whatever will be said to them, excepting, perhaps, a few remarks pointing out to them that ladies are not permitted in the studies!"

"Is that really you, Mr. Prout, or is it some jay playing a trick?" cried Fisher T. Fish.

There was a titter from the little group standing round the study door, and Mr. Prout glared angrily.
"Fish!"

"Yep, sir ?"

"Whom have you in there, boy?"
"Bunter, sir, I guess!"

"Bunter, sır, I guess:"
"Fish, you are prevaricating! I distinctly saw two ladies at your study window. You will open this door instantly!" stantly! "Surely, sir!"
Fish could be heard stepping across the study, and the next moment the key was turned in the lock and the door was flung open.

Mr. Prout and Mr. Quelch peered in, and the group of boys behind them craned their necks forward in order to get a better view. Billy Bunter rose from the chair, and blinked across at the two Form-masters standing in the doorway. "Dear me!" exclaimed Mr. Prout.

Printed and published every Monday by the Proprietors, the Amalexanaed From Limited. The Florinery Bone, Perrington Street, Gendon EU. A. Advertisation, and force the Florinery Edges. For the Control of the Control o

"Fish! Bunter! Why, what on earth are you wearing, Bunter? And what real painter! Why, what on earth are you wearing. Butter? And what is that strange thing on the table?" replied Fish. "We sin't going to have any tricks with the profiteers, Mr. Frout. This is the Fisher T. Fish Hairdressing Salcon. Hair-cuts and shaves at fair prices!" prices !

"Goodness me!"

"I guess I'm going to make wigs when a guess I m going to make wigs when I've had some practice. What do you think of Bunter, sir?" And Fish pointed across the study at the fat Removite. Bunter shifted on his feet uneasily. He was still wearing the enormous golden wig on which the Yankee junior had been working for a considerable time. had endeavoured to copy the glorious effect on the hair adorning the wax model, but had failed miserably, and Bunter felt quite conscious of his appalling appearance as the two masters stood gazing at him

Mr. Quelch's face suddenly became wreathed in smiles. Smiles which he wreathed in smiles. Smiles which he made every effort to subdue, but which refused to disperse, and broadened until he gradually shook with concealed misth. concealed mirth.

Mr. Prout looked at him, and from him to Fish, and from Fish to Bunter, and then to the wax model; and then Mr. Prout thaved, and he gave a spluttering, hearty laugh, which rang along the Remove passage, and filled the end study with its peals.

Ha, ha, ha!"

"What's the joke, sir?" cried Fish.
"Ho, ho, ho!"

"I guess you've got me thinking, Mr. Prout!"

Dear me! Ha, ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha, ha!" roared the crowd of seniors and juniors.
"This ain't a joke!" cried Fish. "If we don't get our hairs cut we've been threatened with punishment, I guess!" "Ha, ha!" laughed Mr. Quelch.

"Ha, ha!" laughed Mr. Queicn.
"Fish, I think I can see through it all my boy "Ho, ho, ho!" roared Mr. Prout, shaking all over.

It's all right Fish, we we were lubouring under a misapprehension. We were under the mistaken impression that Bunter and—and your model were two very live young ladies, and we-we owe you an apology. "I guess

"I can see everything now," continued Mr. Quelch. "You-you were endeavouring to perform a very laudable action, I can see that perfectly well! You were going to cut your Form-fellows' hairs to save them becoming victims of the profiteers! It was very noble of you, Fish, and this afternoon I took the trouble to and this atternoon I took the twouble to go round to all the local hairdressers, and I find that they are indeed charging one shilling for a hair-cut. It is indeed a scandal, and it is profiteering with a vengeance. Any punishments I happened to inflict in class this morning are cancelled forthwith, and I intend to arrange for a man to come to the school to cut hair in future. Dr. Locke will see to that. It will defeat these profiteers."

furrah!" roared Harry Wharton & who had squeezed their way for-"Hurrah!" ward, and had heard their Form master's ward, and had heart their Form-master's very generous apology.

"Where on earth did you get all that paraphernalia from, Fish?" asked Mr. Quelch, pointing to the pile of brushes and combs and razors and bottles the American junior had borrowed from the American juntor had between the fifth Form dormitory.

"I think I know where they came from, sir," said Wingate. "Half the Fifth Form have been complaining to me this afternoon that somebody has raided their dormitory !"

Mr. Quelch frowned:

Mr. Queich frowned:
"Well, well," he said, after a pause.
"Just gather the things up now, Wingate, and see that they are returned to their proper owners. I think the matter might rest there. It seems that we are all liable to make mistakes. Come along, Mr. Prout, we will retire from the

The Fifth Form-master wiped his streaming eyes with his silk handker-chief, and then followed Mr. Quelch as be strode away.

he strode away.

The Sixth-Formers and Fifth-Formers, and the members of the Upper Fourth gradually dispersed. It was beneath their dignity to be seen taking an interest in scenes in the Remove Form passage. Gosling, the school porter, went away numbling; and Harry Wharton & Co. crowded into the end study until there was hardly room to turn round.

"Jolly good, Fishy!" cried Harry

Wharton, "You're a rotten dresser; but you got us off our punishments, anyway!"

"Hear, hear!" roared the Removites.
"Three cheers for Fishy!" cried Harry "Hip, hip-Wharton.

"Hurrah !" "Hip, hip-

"Hurrah !"

" Hip, hip-"

"Hurrah!"
And Fisher Tarleton Fish blushed
His stunts And Fisher Tarleton Fish blushed crimson with satisfaction. His stunts seldom "came off," but it seemed that at last he had scored a winner as The Schoolboy Barber!

THE END. " THE

on't miss "THE SECRET (Don't next Monday's Grand Long Complete Story of Greyfriars School — by cried Harry FRANK RICHARDS.)

The Editor's Chat.

THE MACHET. THE GEM. THE BOYS' FRIEND. CHUCKLES. THE PENNY POPULAR. Every Monday. Every Wed. Every Monday. Every Friday. Every Friday. YOUR EDITOR IS ALWAYS CLAD TO HEAR FROM HIS READERS.

FOR NEXT MONDAY. "THE SECRET OF THE WIRES!"

By Frank Richards.

Our next story will deal with the further dventures of the chums of Greyfriars. Mr. "Larry" Lascelles, the popular Maths master, fresh from his activities in the Army, gives Harry Wharton & Co. the opportunity of their lives, and the result affords plenty of fun and not a little exception of the control of the con you miss reading

"THE SECRET OF THE WIRES!" and the only way you can make certain of your copy is by ordering it in advance.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE!

In little over a fortnight hence all readers of the Companion Papers—and others as well, of course—will have the opportunity to proof course—will have the opportunity to pro-cure the finest book for boys and girls that has ever been published.

THE HOLIDAY ANNUAL

is the how which I refer, and it till as the box which I refer, and it till the companion Papers. That is why I am asking you to take particular notice. There is certain to be a very great demand for the which will be on October 34th—and I carnestly recommend you to place an order immediately if you want to make sare of your mediately fire you want to make sare of your place. THE CONTENTS.

THE CONTENIS.

Well when I think of attempting to give your form in think of attempting to give your form of the worderful book. I am faced with an almost impossible task; in fact, it is impossible in the limited space at my disposal. In the limited space at my disposal. In the limited space at my disposal. In the property of the pr just mention the most outstanding features. First and foremost, as far as readers of the Companion Papers are concerned, are FOUR GRAND LONG SCHOOL STORIES! These four stories, which are among the very finest that Martin Clifford, Frank Richards, and Owen Conquest have ever written, deal with Greyfriars, Rookwood, and written, ocal with dreyriars, noowwood, and St. Jim's schools. They are splendidly illus-trated, and each has a magnificent sr-photogravure plate—full page—representing the most exciting or amusing incident in the form a very attractive feature of the book. Two of them illustrate dramatic incidents in two other long, complete atories, which will be thoroughly enjoyed by all readers. One is a splendid Redskin story entitled "Straight Pine's Sacrifice"; the other is a stirring yarm of olden days entitled "In Monmouth's deals with the "Greyfrians Herald" and "Tom Merry's Weekly." This is certain to be a most popular feature, for it represents pages and pages of screamingly funny little stories and contributions written by the most celebrated characters of Greyfrians and St. A SPLENDID PLAY for amateur actors is one of the novelties of the book. It introduces Harry Moarton & Co. Successfully performed by readers, it will provide a most amusing and interesting entertainment for winter parties. PICTURE GALLERIES of Greyfriars, Rookwood, and St. Jim's will appeal to all readers of the Companion Papers, as will also the "Who's Who " of the ARTICLES, PUZZLES, AND TRICKS are too numerous to mention in detail, but they will provide endless entertainment to all boys and girls who secure a copy of

FOUR MAGNIFICENT COLOURED PLATES

A FIFTY-PAGE SUPPLEMENT

THE HOLIDAY ANNUAL, PRICE 5s.

THE "GREYFRIARS' HERALD"

is another great production that will shortly be obtainable. It makes its reappearance on October 20th, and No. 1 will create a new record in the way of school journals for boys

But again I must press upon you the neces-ty for ordering early. The "Greyfriars

But again 1 must press upon you the neces-sity -for ordering early. The 'Geveriras' Herald " is being talked of everywhere, and there is going to be an unusually beavy demand for it. Therefore, give your new-agent definite instructions to save a copy for you on October 20th. TUCK HAMPERS.

are going to be given away again as prizes in a splendid competition, of which particulars are given in the first number. In the old days this was the most popular feature that had, yere been included in a school journal, and, judging by the letters I have received on the subject, it is going to be so again.

DON'T FORGET THE DATE-OCTOBER 20th.

A STANDARD OF BEHAVIOR OF BEHAVIOR IN DESCRIPTION IN DESCRIPTION OF STANDARD IN STANDARD I

GOGGS, THE GRAMMARIAN.

:: OUR MAGNIFICENT SERIAL STORY. ::

By RICHARD RANDOLPH.

THE PROPERTY OF A SECREPTION IS A CONTROL OF A STREET, OF

SYNOPRIS

Johnny Goggs comes to Rylcombe Grammar School from Franklingham with his clums Trickett, Blount, and Waters. Goggs is a jul-jitan expert, and a clever imtongs is a purpitsu expert, and a clever impersonator, and the organiser of many brilliant jupes. He leads an expedition of Grammarians to St. Jim's, and accomplishes one of the most during night raids ever perpetrated.

Gorald Cutts of St. Jim's falls foul of Bingo, the butcher, and after a scrap, in which Cutts is worsted, Bingo picks a quarrel with Goggs.

uarred with Goggs.

Bingo is completely defeated, and Cutts sees a big bet. Goggs accepts Bingo's hallenge to a return fight.

Supper Larking, and Cutts kidnap Goggs

ohallenge to a ... Larking. during the night before the day of the fight. Consequently, he fails to appear at the appointed place in the wood. At the last minute Blount is handed a letter in Goggs minute Blount is handed a retter in on handwriting, asying that he is not coming. Bingo fights Grundy, and defeats it forgas' three chums and a party of Jim's juniors remain behind afterwards discuss the disappearance of Gogas, wil-levition describes as "jolly fishs". Goggs, which

(Now read on.)

A Plan. KNOW the hotel he'd have gone to," said Tricks. "We can wire there." on the whole," drawled Cardew, it appears to be taken for granted that the letter was faked, Who's got the thins? An has anyone a sample of toggs authentic bond? We might make somethin out of band? We mig Non est inventus' will be the answer from the hotel, an' as there isn't any maiden aunt we can't well get an answer from her."

e can't well get an antwer from her.
The letter was produced, and Bags found ac written to him by Goggs during the last olidays, which had somehow been kept in one writ

olidays, which is pocket-book.

They were handed over to Levison are a wry grin as he took them, are a wry grin as he took them. They were handed over to Levison. The gave a wry grin as he took them, for he rould not help recalling the time when he had used his talent for forgery—to put it bluintly—to wrongful ends. But he began at once to give them critical examination. "But who could have done it?" asked

But who Gordon Gay. Shipe! se pe!" snapped Wagtail. ny, you know," said Clive, "you can't possiblyinstally—"I know Suipe, and you don't.

He's been hauging round Goggles lately,
Dein't I say that he would do Johnny down
if Johnny didn't watch out, you fellows?"
"You, I do remember something like that," admitted Dags.

"But if Snipe wrote that letter, what's become of Goggles?" asked Harry Wootton, "And why did Suipe write it?" said his

That's what we've got to find out." Bags soid.

d Larking weren't at the fight,

"Carpenter was, (hough;" Tricks said.
"Carpenter wouldn't stand in with them for a beastly dodge like this;" Gordon Gay, said.

He might know something though, remarked Grandy, speaking as if his mouth were full of plums. It was swollen inside from the impact of Bingo's lists and own teeth.

Levison looked up.

"It's n elevis foreign, but it's a forgery,
he sold slowly.

he sold slowly.

"It's new foreign and the sold slowly.

"It that letter was forced our Johnson,"

"It that letter was forced our Johnson,"

"It that letter was forced our Johnson,"

"It's law in excellent our Johnson, the sold slowly forced and leave the sold slowly forced and the sold slowly forced and the sold slowly forced and slowly force Levison looked un sold. "We'd better arrange what's to be done about queries, and so in. It may be a day or two before we cent find himself and the sold of the sold of little later at the Grammar School.

Starting on it!

N the quad at the Grammar School Gordon Gay and Frank Monk ran across Carpenter.

Carpenter.

Very few fellows were left about the place.

Very few fellows were surprised to see him. He had not been at the fleat.

Hallo, Carpenter, sold Gay.

"Fee, of course I and "nawered Carpenter mondily. "I'm going by the next train; but, I say, have son fellows seen Larking."

Now that I come to think of it, neither Larking nor Sanje was at the fight," said.

Monk.
"Oh, the fight came off, then? Did Goggs turn up after all?" asked Carpetter eagerly.
"No, Goggs didn't turn up. Grandy Gought (fay, watching Carpenter's face narrowly.
"I say, though does anyloody know where Goggs is?" faitered Larking's chum.
"Nobody, There was a letter which raid."

Goggs is?" faltered Larking's clum.
"Nobody. There was a letter which caid that he had gone by an early train to the lounce of a molecular with the control of the lounce of a molecular with the did go!" hroke in Carpenter.
"As it happens, he hand a maidon ount, and we don't believe that the letter was written by him at all." said Monk deliber-

Just then Exe Carker came up, his then secring face contorted into a stalle. "You won't see Lording, Carpenter, said, "Lark cleared of directly a brokker, with your dear triend Snipe Ivine !" Support Carpenter.

"You're lying!" snapped Carpenter. "Those two haven! been so speaking letter for days past!"
"Oh, I'm lying, am I: returned Carker, with an ugly grin. "Well, all I'm going to tell you is that I've seen Lark and Snipey for a. with their heads very close together sever times lately. It's always been when you were safely out of the way, though be, he' Looks as if Lark was playing some deep game with you be, he!"

Carpenter made a furious dash at him,

Carpenter made a Parious dash at him. But Gay seized Carpenter.

"He isn't worth it!" Gordon Gay said.

"Kick him, Frank!"

But before Frank Monk could use his boot

But before Frank Monk could use his boot Carker had botted.
"Let me go!" panted Carpenter.
"Th let you go tow, replied Gay. "Give Carker twenty yards" start when there's an-one thirsting for his bleed and he's partly safe. Not that I should object to your handling him, dear boy. But he really isn't worth it."

"Look here, you fellow know something!"
Carpenter said. "What did you mean about tioggs?

"Tell us first what your anxiety about Larking is?" suggested Moak on a chun?" snapped Carpenter.

All that was best in him spoke in those words. Weak as water in most respects, Carpenter was strong in loyalty. most respects, tarpenter was strong in 100 5012.

Gay and Monk saw that, and they took measures accordingly. Anyone who had only known those two in their ordinary mood would hardly have recognised them now. "Carpenter," said Gay, in his gravest tones

Tather fancy you've come to a place when you've got to choose one, for all whether you've got to choose one, for all whether you're going to be decent or or stand in with Lorking. It may sound a bit brutal, for it know that you and he have always been know that you and he have a don't understand what you mean," replied Carpenter dully.

Then Frank Monk spoke.

"I don't know why you man't to see Lacking so particularly." he said. "But you and he and Saipe all belong to the same dornitory as Goggs; and we're jolly sure that something has happened to Goggs. We ean't credit his keeping away from the light of his own free will."

Carpenter trembled, and his face went hite to the lips. "1-1- But what about that letter:"

be said. "Goggs didn't write it; we are certain of "toggs didn't write it; we are certain of that!" Gay replied.

"Larking didn't—I'll swear he didn't! He would never have done a thing like that:"
"Suipe did. That's what we believe. But Larking must surely have known of it." Monk said perspiration.

Carpenter passed a wavering hand over his forehead, on which stood great beads of perspiration.

"Larking gave me his word of honour that he wasn't out with Suipe last night," he said. "They were both out, but they weren't out together."

(There will be another splendid long instalment of this grand school story in next Monday's issue of the Manue. Order your copy in adcance.)

of pretty girls by Stanteg Davis, benefi-fully printed in echouse. the gires free with receivery of the first 3 com-bers of the FAMILY PICTORIAL

A NEW Home Picture Weekly

In addition to the FREE plate, No. 1 of the FAMILY PICTORIAL gives you fascinating pictorial pages dealing with the stage, the cinema, football, amateur photographs, etc.,—two grand serials—two other stories-articles on gardening and poultry. and many other unique features. Pictures on every page. Make sure of Your copy now!

