SUM

EVERY MONDAY
No. 217
April 4, 1953

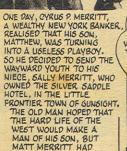

BILLY THE KID

BILLY the KID Ropes em in

BILLY THE KID-LONE AVENGER

HIS OWN IDEAS --

PAWLEY HAP BEEN WAITING FOR ~~

TELL YOU WHAT,

KID! WE'LL PLAY FOR

YOUR COUSIN'S HOTEL!

IF YOU WIN I'LL PAY YOU THE

PRICE OF THE JOINT AND IF

YOU LOSE ~~ WELL, LET'S

NOT TALK ABOUT THAT

YET!

THIS WAS THE MOMENT THAT NED

BESIDES BEING A WASTER MATT MERRITT WAS ALSO A COWARD. 50-INSTEAD OF TELLING BALLY OF HIS STUPIDITY HE HUNG ABOUT UNTIL HE HAD A CHANCE TO GET THE KEYS TO THE SAFE WHERE THE DEEDS OF THE HOTEL WERE KEPT --

I WON'T SIGN

GET OUT -- BEFORE

OUT .

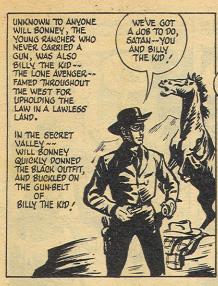

4-SUN-April 4, 1953

SUDDENLY ABOVE THE DIN OF THE WHIRLING SAW, NED PAWLEY HEARD THE COMMANDING VOICE OF BILLY THE KID ~~

FALTHOUGH THE CROOK SLAMMED BACK THE LEVER -- SALLY STILL MOVED TOWARDS THE SAW --

AS BILLY THE KID WRIGGLED OUT TOWARDS THE SIZZLING STICKS OF DYNAMITE, NED PAWLEY'S MEN BLASTED AWAY AT HIM FROM BEHIND THE WOOD-PILES--

SALLY MERRITT WAS AN EXPERT WHEN IT CAME TO MARKEMANSHIP AND SHE SOON MADE THE GUNMEN DUCK FOR COVER. ~

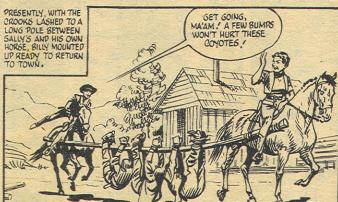

THE FUSES DETONATED THE DYNAMITE AS IT HURTLED THROUGH THE AIR, AND THE TERRIFIC BLAST SENT THE PILES OF TIMBER TUMBLING LIKE NINE-PINE ~

A FEW MOMENTS LATER, WITH NED PAWLEY
AND HIS ROUGHNECKS LINED UP BEFORE HIM, BILLY THE KIP TOOK HIS LEAVE OF SALLY MERRITT - THANKS AND
GOOD LUCK, BILLY
MAYBE ONE DAY
I'LL BE ABLE TO AND WALLEY
AWLEY
AW

NEXT DAY, WHEN MATT MERRITT REPORTED TO WILL BONNEY AT THE CIRCLE-B RANCH ~-

TO WORK! O.K. KID! HERE'S AN AXE. WANT ALL THOSE LOGS CHOPPED UP PRONTO! WHEN YOU'VE DONE THAT THERE'S STABLES TO BE CLEANED OUT! AFTER THAT, REPORT TO THE COOKHOUSE -- THERE'S A PILE OF SPUPS TO PEEL. WHEN THAT'S DONE YOU CAN HELP SERVE UP THE GRUB -- AND YOU'D BETTER HURRY-COS MY BOYS DON'T LIKE TO BE KEPT WAITING FOR THEIR GRUB. RIGHT AFTER THE MEAL REPORT TO ME AND I'LL FIND SOME MORE WORK FOR YOU

BOTH ROBIN AND MARIAN WERE EXPERT BOW MAKERS AND THEY GOOD FASHIONED THREE TRUSTY LONGBOWS AND A SUPPLY OF ARROWS FROM THE BRANCHES

I'M SORRY

ERRY

The anxious juniors gathered round the still figure of the young keeper. "Is he badly hurt?" asked Blake in a low voice.

Young Wally D'Arcy has broken bounds and gone into the woods to look for his runaway He runs into trouble when he is captured by Barberry, the rascally head gamekeeper, and his gang of poachers. Barberry has knocked out Lynn, the young gamekeeper who has been taking the blame for the head keeper's crimes. The poachers are just deciding what to do with Wally when they hear something. . . .

This BRAVO week: ST. IIM'S!

HERE was a sound in the wood. The poachers started and listened. Barberry, with his hand on the gun, stood as if suddenly turned to stone. Who was racing at top speed through the dark wood towards the glade?

Wally tried to shout again, but the rough hand on his mouth choked his cry.
"Better run for it!" muttered

one of the poachers. "The game's up, Mr Barberry!"

The keeper did not reply; he seemed almost stunned. The poachers looked at him impatiently, and then, suddenly releasing Wally as the footsteps came closer, they darted into the wood and ran. The sack of poached rabbits lay in the grass where they had dropped it. Wally reeled against a tree, his dog still in his arms.
"Help!" he gasped.

"St. Jim's to the rescue!"

It was Tom Merry's voice, and Tom Merry & Co. were bursting from the thickets into the glade. There was a strange sound from Barberry, some-thing between a sigh and a groan. He dropped the gun and plunged into the wood. He knew that all was lost now—that only arrest remained arrest and imprisonment, from which only prompt flight could save him.

"Wally!" cried Arthur Augustus. "Wally! Where are you?"
"Here I am, Gus!" said Wally, all his coolness returning as he found himself with the chums of St. Jim's. "Fancy meeting you!"

"Who was that bolting?"

asked Tom Merry breathlessly. "A couple of poachers and Mr. Barberry." "What!"

"It's a fact! He was in league with them. Look at that sack." 'My hat!"

"By Jove! Pewwaps you will admit now, Blake, that I was wight."

I never said you weren't, Gussy.

'I am vewy glad I decided to look into the matter. It has had most fortunate wesults."

'It was you yelled for help, suppose, Wally?" said Tom

"Yes. They had collared me, you see, and Barberry was picking up his gun. I don't know whether he was going to pot me or not, but he looked like it. Much obliged to you for coming up like this. But I say, look at that poor chap, he's in a pretty bad state, I think."

"Who-what? Why, it's young Lynn!" "Yes. Barberry socked him on the head with the butt of his Tom Merry knelt beside the bung man. The moonlight young man. gleamed on his white face as Tom raised his head. The junior shuddered. For a moment he thought that Lynn was dead. but he was breathing, though faintly. A huge bruise was forming on his forehead where the blow had fallen. The juniors gathered round anxiously. Most of them knew Lynn, and liked him.

'Is he badly hurt?" asked Blake in a low voice.

"I can't tell. He's stunned, and doesn't show any sign of coming to. We must get him to "The village is a long way off."

"There's Sir Neville Boyle's place, that's not half a mile from here," said Tom Merry.

Blake gave a start. "Sir Neville has sacked him, you know."

"He couldn't refuse to take in a wounded man. Besides, it's pretty clear now how the facts of the case stand."

"Jolly clear!" said Wally.
"I heard the rotters talking, and I can tell the whole story. Barberry won't dare to show up again, you can bet on that."

"Well, we'll get him to Sir Neville's place," said Blake. "We can carry him between us. He's no light weight, though.'

weight. But there were seven juniors, none of them weak. They raised Lynn in their arms.

He was still unconscious.
"Good," said Wally, "and the doctor can attend to my dog at the same time. Barberry shot him, but I think he isn't badly hurt. He seems lively enough. Do you notice how he keeps on trying to get at you, Gus?"

"You-you young wascal! Keep the bwute away from my replied Wally's twousers," brother.

SIR NEVILLE BOYLE PUTS THINGS RIGHT

IGHTS were gleaming from the drawing-room windows of Sir Neville Boyle's house. The baronet had company that evening, and the juniors heard the sounds of music coming from the lighted rooms. The french windows upon the terrace were open and the portly form of Sir Neville Boyle, in evening dress, could be seen there.

The baronet uttered a sudden exclamation. He had caught sight of the procession on the drive. He came quickly forward to the steps of the terrace and peered down into the darkness.

What is that?

"Excuse this uncewemonious visit at such an hour," came a polite voice from the gloom, but-

"Dry up, Gussy."

"I wefuse to dwy up. I am explaining the matter to Sir Neville Boyle. We have an injured man here who is in need of medical attention."

"What?" exclaimed Sir

Neville in amazement.

A number of Sir Neville's guests had come out at the french windows. A crowd of men and women in evening dress looked down on the juniors in amazement. The boys from St. Jim's carried Lynn on to the terrace, and there was an exclamation of horror from the guests when they saw the injured man.

'In heaven's name," cried

Sir Neville Boyle, "what has happened?"

"This is Lynn, sir," said Tom Merry quietly. "He was knocked down and stunned by your head keeper, Barberry, in the wood."
"Bless me! He was poaching,

I suppose?"

"No. Barberry was poaching, and Lynn discovered him-"
"What! You are dreaming!"

"There are plenty of proofs, including an eye-witness to the whole matter," said Tom Merry. 'But at present this chap needs care. He has had a nasty crack.

Will you send for a doctor?"
"Of course. Whatever the truth is, he shall have proper attention," said the baronet.

10-SUN-April 4, 1953

A BIG "HOW-DO" FROM YOUR EDITOR!

Dear Chums.

Every now and then I like to write you a personal letter. This week there's something I'd like you to do for me. Will you write to me and tell me what you think of SUN? In particular I would like you to tell me what you like and if there is anything you don't like. Only in this way can I find out what you, the readers of SUN, think of my paper.

You will find my address at the bottom of this letter, and I will reply to you all personally.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PROPERTY OF

By the way, owing to the Easter holidays, your next week's copy of SUN will be on sale next Thursday, April 2, instead of Monday, April 6, so be sure to get your copy if you want to read SUN during the holiday.

Cheerio chums

I shall be looking forward to receiving and reading all your letters, Your old pal,

CONTROL CONTROL OF THE STATE OF

'SUN". The Fleetway House. Farringdon Street, London, E.C.4.

of Sir Neville's guests drove off for a doctor. The injured man, who was still unconscious, was carried into the house.

"This matter will need explaining," said Sir Neville.

"It's all right!" broke in D'Arcy minor, who had been anxiously examining his dog. "Indeed," said the baron

"Indeed," said the baronet drily. "Is it?"
"I was speaking of Pongo, Sir. It's all right."

"What does the boy mean?"

"He means his dog is all ight, sir," said Arthur wight, sir, Augustus.

"That's it, he's all right," said
Wally gleefully. "He's only been grazed. There's a lump of skin gone, and he's lost a lot of blood, but he's all right. I can wrap him up in my jacket and carry him home. I say, we'd better be off. The sooner I get poor old Pong comfortably to bed, the better it will be for him."

him."
"Shut up, Wally. Sir Neville is speaking."
"You boys had better come into the library and explain this matter," said Sir Neville. And excusing himself to his guests, he led the way. He asked the juniors a lot of questions in the library and learned the whole

"Poor Lynn!" he said. "I have wronged him. When Barberry is found he shall be arrested. I had not the slightest suspicion that he was such a rascal. I will send you boys back to the school in the car with a note to your master, which may save you from punishment."

"We should like to hear what the doctor says about young Lynn first, sir," said Tom Merry.

"Yes! I want to be able to tell Mawy, the housemaid, that I have looked into the matter, and that it is all wight."

"I can hear the doctor now,

And in less than a minute one I think," said Sir Neville. "I Sir Neville's guests drove off will come back and tell you what he says."

He left the juniors in the library. In ten minutes he returned. Tom Merry looked at him eagerly.

How is Lynn, sir?"

"He has had a nasty knock, but the doctor says he will be himself again in a week, I am glad to say. And now the car is ready for you."
"Thank you, sir!"

"One more thing, sir," sald D'Arcy. "Did you know that Lynn was engaged to Mawy, the housemaid in the School House at St. Jim's?"

"No, I cannot say I was aware of it," said Sir Neville, with a smile.

"It is wather an important matter to her, sir. You see, they were going to be mawwied at Easter, and when you gave young Lynn the order of the boot it mucked up their mawwiage awwangements. I pwomised her to look into the matter and set it wight, and I am glad that my efforts have turned out so successfully. But may I tell Mawy that it is all wight, sir-that you are going to take Lynn on again, and they can be mawwied at Easter all the same?"

Sir Neville laughed. "Certainly, my lad. And you may tell Mary that I am going to make William Lynn my head keeper to repay the wrong I did him.

"That is good news! Thank you vewy much, Sir Neville.'

The baronet showed the boys to the waiting car, and shook hands with all of them. Wally was still nursing his injured pet.

"I think I managed that affair pwetty well," D'Arcy remarked, as the car drove back to the school. And as the others were too sleepy to argue, nobody contradicted him.

They arrived at St. Jim's at last. Taggles was so amazed at the sight of the juniors in Sir Neville Boyle's car that he forgot to grumble at the trouble of opening the gate. at the Iom Merry rang the bell of the School House, and Mary the housemaid came to the door to open it. The girl was looking very quiet, and she looked as if she had been crying.

Mr. Railton, the house-master, came out of his study with a very severe expression on his face. Tom Merry took off his cap and gave him Sir Neville's letter. Meanwhile, Arthur Augustus was explain-ing matters to Mary, and Wally was taking his pet away to the kennel.

"It s all wight, Mawy," said D'Arcy. "You wemember I pwomised you to look into the matter. I have pwoved Lynn's innocence. Barbewwy has bolted and Sir Neville is going to make Lynn his head keeper.

The girl looked astounded.

"But-but-"It's all true, Mary," said Blake. "We'll tell you all about it tomorrow, but every word Gussy says is the truth, except that he didn't—"

"Ahem!" said Mr. Railton, having read the letter. "Under the circumstances, you will be pardoned, boys. Go to bed at once.'

'Yes, sir." "Mary, I am glad to tell you that William Lynn is cleared of the charge against him, and that Sir Neville has taken him into favour again," said Mr.

Railton kindly. "There, don't cry, it will be all right now."

Mary was crying, but it was from happiness now. She went away with her apron to her eyes.

A moment later, D'Arcy minor came in with Herries. The new junior presented a shocking sight. He was covered with mud and dog hairs, and Mr. Railton gave him a glance. "You had better take your brother to a bathroom before he goes to bed, D'Arcy,"

And D'Arcy did, The juniors were glad to get to bed again. And glad, too, to escape the caning they had expected—and which Skimpole had not escaped on his return an hour or two earlier. The next day St. Jim's was buzzing with the story, and Figgins & Co. came over from the New House to hear all the details, and to growl at Tom Merry and Blake for leaving them out of the fun. Arthur Augustus told the story right and left, saying that he had looked into the matter and set it right. And he was very indignant when he found that most of the fellows were more inclined to give the credit to D'Arcy minor, who was now the most popular junior in the school.

Watch out next week for the first instalment of another grand St. Jim's story about the strangest new boy who ever came to the school. . . .

Cadbury's Dairy Milk Chocolate—scrumptious chocolatey chocolate with the creamy taste! There's a glass-and-a-half of full-cream milk in every half-pound. You can get it in penny and twopenny bars too!

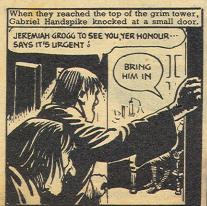

YES! It was Sebastian Crawley! "Creepy Crawley .. the rogue who had once spread terror as Phantom Highway-man' until the gallant Dick Turpin unmasked him. . .

And so Dick Turpin meets his old enemy with the clash of glittering blades! Don't miss next week's thrilling instalment of this swash-buckling yarn.

SUN—April 4, 1953—13

MILD BILL HICKOR

TAKES A RISK

BRETT ELDER'S SCHEME HE familiar velvet-coated figure of Wild Bill Hickok rode up the main street of Dakota City. As he pulled up outside the one and only hotel in town, the marshal saw his old friend Jim Murphy, the Pony Express Agent, walking slowly along the rough wooden sidewalk. Murphy's face wore a worried look and his forehead was creased in a deep frown.

"Howdy, Jim!" Hickok hailed cheerily as he swung lightly out of his saddle and tossed his mare's reins round the hitching rail.

The Pony Express Agent looked up with a start, and then he held out his hand to the "Well, if it isn't Wild Bill Hickok! Haven't seen you for months! How are you, Bill?"

"Just fine, Jim," grinned the marshal. "But you're looking pretty glum. What's wrong?"
"Plenty. Come along to my office and I'll tell you."

As the marshal and Jim Murphy walked the few yards to the Pony Express Office they did not see the shifty-looking man standing across the street who regarded them through narrowed lids. As they entered the office the man slowly crossed over the road.

"It's like this, Bill," began Murphy when they were seated in his office. "I've two sacks of money to be delivered tomorrow to the Wells Fargo Office in Deadwood. A couple of hours ago Bob Trent, one of my best riders, was thrown from his horse and is now in bed with a broken leg! Can't think what got into his horse. Bob had no sooner slung the moneybags across his saddle and mounted, than the critter suddenly reared skywards and sent Bob flying out of the saddle."

"Surely you've other riders, Jim?" said the marshal.

Not here in town, they're all out on their scheduled runs. I just daren't trust anyone else to carry those moneybags," replied Murphy.
"Why must the money be in Deadwood tomorrow?" asked "To pay off the miners working the Deadwood Silver Mine. You know what those tough miners are like—if they don't get their money on pay day, they'll wreck the town!" "Yep—they'd do just that," chuckled the marshal. "Well, we can't have Deadwood busted up. I'll have to take the money there myself."

"Bill, would you really? Gosh, I'd be grateful. If you take it, then I'll know it will reach Wells Fargo safely. It sure is good of you—thanks."

After a hearty meal, the mar-shal set off for Deadwood with the Pony Express moneybags Thundering hooves and blazing six-guns! . . . The peerless pistoleer rides the Pony Express!

slung across his saddle. But as he rode out of town he failed to notice a pair of ferrety eyes regarding him from behind a curtained window in the hotel.

"There he goes, boys," rasped Brett Elder, the shifty-looking owner of the ferrety eyes. "But he won't get far."

"How come he won't, Brett?" asked one of Elder's com-panions. "Hickok's got the fastest nag in the West."

"Even the fastest nag in the West has to slow down when its leg begins to swell," chortled Brett. "I overheard Hickok and Murphy talking in the Pony Express office. As soon as I heard Hickok agree to take the money I pulled a hair from Hickok's hoss's tail and tied it tightly round the critter's fetlock. After she's galloped a few miles the hair will cut into her leg and cause it to hurt and swell. She will then have to slow down. And that's when we'll nab him and take the money for ourselves."

"Gee, boss, that's a nifty idea," praised one of his gang. 'All the same, it's a pity there wasn't time to remove Hickok's saddle and slip some prickly thorn under the saddle blanket, like you did with Bob Trent. I ain't never seen a hoss rear so fast or so high as that one of Trent's. He had no sooner climbed in the saddle than he was stretched out flat in the road with a broken leg. Ha, ha." 'That fancy-dressed marshal nearly upset our plans," said Elder. "With Trent out of the way and no other riders available, Murphy would have had to keep the miners' payroll in his safe at the office tonight. It would have been kid's play for us to have robbed that safe and skipped off under cover of darkness. I wasn't plannin' on anyone else carryin' the moneybags. Still, everythin's O.K. after all. Now let's go and finish off that interferin' marshal and mind you boys do the job good and proper, otherwise you'll get no share of the miners' money, see?"

WILD BILL RIDES THE PONY EXPRESS

A S Gypsy, the marshal's sorrel mare, sped along at a fast steady gallop which ate up the miles, Wild Bill leaned forward and gave her neck a friendly pat.

"Gypsy, old girl," he said, "if you keep this pace up we'll reach Deadwood before dawn."

As though understanding what her master had said, the noble animal put on an even greater burst of speed. But she had not gone far before she let out a sharp whinny of pain and slowed down. The marshal instantly drew rein.
"What's wrong, Gypsy?"

asked Wild Bill in a puzzled tone. Dismounting, he looked down at her right foreleg. "Good grief!" he exclaimed. "That looks bad."

The mare watched her master with trusting eyes as he lifted up her leg and examined it. At the first glance all he could see was the ugly red swelling.

"What could have c "What could have caused it?" he wondered. And then, bending lower, he looked more closely. This time he saw the tightly tied horse hair which was practically hidden under the swollen flesh. His eyes narrowed in anger against the unknown person who had dared to inflict pain on his beloved mare.

Using the utmost care, he cut the hair with the point of his the hair with the point of his sharp bowie knife. Then he gently massaged Gypsy's leg.

"Whoever tied up Gypsy's fetlock knows that I'm carrying this money," Wild Bill thought.
"And they're out to get me."
"Part Electronic has been been the state of the Brett Elder's scheme had not been so clever after all. The horse hair had given the game away to Wild Bill.

Gypsy's ears suddenly jerked forward as she caught a distant sound of pounding hoofbeats. Wild Bill heard them too, and not wishing to risk being in-volved in a fight because of the miners' money, he grabbed the reins and hurriedly led the mare over to some large boulders lining the trail. They had no sooner taken cover behind the rocks than five horsemen rounded the bend in the trail and thundered past.

"So," murmured Hickok. recognising the riders. "The Elder Gang! Lucky for me Gypsy slowed down here, and not along a wide open stretch, otherwise they would have spotted me."

Although the swelling would take some time to go down, the pain had quickly left Gypsy's leg once the hair had been removed, and after giving her a short rest, the marshal remounted.

"It's no use following this trail, Gypsy," he said. "The Elder Boys will soon find out they've missed us. We'll have to take the long trail to Deadwood.

The marshal galloped back a couple of miles and took another route to Deadwood. It was slightly longer, and was not one used by the Pony Express riders, but Wild Bill knew there was every chance of reaching his destination safely.

And he did. He reached the outskirts of Deadwood at dawn the following morning without having encountered anyone along the trail.

The marshal did not ride into town straight away, for he had one or two things to figure out

14-SUN-April 4, 1953

GUN-FIRE!

COUPLE of hours later A Wild Bill rode into Deadwood, the moneybags hanging firmly from his saddle. In spite of the early hour, several people were about, and they gazed with interest at the handsome rider on the superb sorrel mare. The early morning sun shone on the enormous silver buckle of his heavily embossed gunbelt, and pin-pointed each of the golden spurs decorating his glossy thigh-length cavalry boots.

The marshal had almost reached the Wells Fargo Office when there came a sudden sharp crack of a revolver shot from behind, and a bullet passed clean through his white sombrero.

At the same instant two shots came at him from ahead, one drilling a hole through the sleeve of his natty velvet jacket, and the other ripping away part of his neatly-tied black cravat.

"I thought so!" muttered Hickok, dropping both gauntleted hands down to his greased cut-away holsters. With lightning speed they came up with a pair of blazing Colts, and the

It was the Elder Gang, who, unable to find the marshal along the route, had ridden on into Deadwood, determined to kill him when he finally arrived with the miners' payroll.

Two of them had rushed out into the street to fire at him from behind, while the other three were blazing away at him from up ahead.

Brett Elder was determined to kill Wild Bill Hickok, and he did not see how he could possibly fail when he had the marshal right between crossfire. "Let him have it, boys," roared Elder as he squeezed his trigger.

But before he could fire a second time there was a spurt of flame from one of Hickok's silver - and - ivory - butted Colts, and to Elder's fury, he found his six-gun blasted from his

The speed and cool courage of the marshal's handling of the attack was incredible. Guiding Gypsy only by the pressure of his knees, Wild Bill made her whirl round and round in the swirling dust so that he could marshal started pumping lead fire at both parties of men. He nificent shooting, into his attackers.

Seemed to take no notice of the When the sher bullets flying all round him, just missing him by inches.

behind him, wounding him in the leg and blowing his rifle to

In a flash, as Gypsy wheeled round, Wild Bill dropped the third bandit. His companion made a dash for one of the buildings, firing wildly as he ran, but the marshal was too quick for him and a bullet in the anticle leid him low. the ankle laid him low.

The fifth and last man, behind Hickok, took careful aim but just as he fired Gypsy whirled round again and his bullet rushed past the marshal's cheek, clipping off a lock of his long fair hair. The next instant Hickok's bullet felled him.

The fight had lasted just sixty seconds. Five men against one. And the five had lost! Wild Bill's clothes were somewhat tattered from bullet holes, but his deadly gunplay and masterly horsemanship had saved his life.

Through the gun-smoked street ran the sheriff and the townsfolk. They crowded round the marshal as he dismounted, Another stirring Wild Bill story congratulating him on his mag-

When the sheriff learned that Wild Bill was taking the place of Bob Trent, the Pony Express He downed one of the men rider, in order to deliver the miners' money, he frowned.

"You were taking a chance with other people's money, weren't you, Marshal?" he asked. "Supposing the Elder Gang had shot you down and made off with the cash?

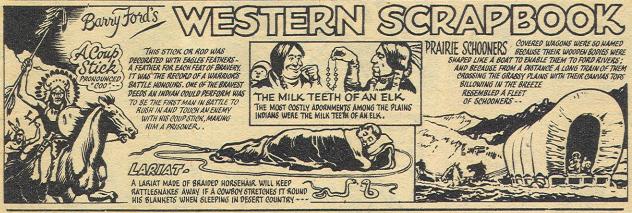

Hickok gave a quiet smile. "I'd already figured that out, Sheriff. At dawn this morning crept into town on foot and delivered the money to the Wells Fargo Agent. Then I sneaked back to Gypsy, filled the empty money-bags with stones, and rode in. I knew the Elder Gang would ambush me as they'd failed to get me on the journey here, and I wanted to bring them in."

The sheriff gasped. "You rode into an ambush deliberately, Marshal? What a risk!"

"In my job, Sheriff, I've got to take risks sometimes-that's what makes it interesting." And Wild Bill's steely blue eyes twinkled merrily.

next week.

SUN STARS FOR YOU TO KEEP

SUN

EVERY MONDAY

39

This week's name warring jokes from readers! The First Prize is Is. 6d., the remainder receive Ss. How about a joke from you? Seed it to The Joker, 5 Commelite Street, London, E.C.A. The Editor's decision is final.

