SUNN

EVERY MONDAY
No. 220
April 25, 1983

BILLY THE KID-LONE AVENGER WE ARE AT PEACE WITH OUR PAWNEE BROTHERS 1 GUESS WE'VE A LOAD OF RIFLES

Big Sam McQuade was a crook who made his living by the unlaw-ful sale of guns to the Redskins. He had stolen hundreds of old army rifles and hoped to sell them at great profit to the warlike Kiowa Indians, He knew that the Kiowas were always fighting their bitter enemies the Pawnees.

But when Big Sam visited the Kiowa camp he received a shock for the Kiowas and the Pawnees had just declared a peace treaty

THE GREAT WHITE SPIRIT ON OUR HANDS OF WAR SLEEPS BOSS ! WE SHALL NEVER WAR WITH THE PAWNEES AGAIN -- UNLESS THE GREAT WHITE SPIRIT OF THE REDMAN ORDERS US TO DON THE WAR-PAINT. GO -- TAKE YOUR GUNG ELSEWHERE

LEAVING THE WAGON-LOAD OF GUNG WITH THE REST OF HIG GANG IN THE HILLG, BIG SAM MSQUADE AND HIS SECOND IN COMMAND RODE UNHAPPILY INTO THE NEARBY TOWN OF LITTLE FALLS

WHAT ARE WE GOIN' TO DO, 8065 WE CAN'T WAIT FOR THAT SPIRIT TO TURN UP! THOSE GUNE'LL GO RUSTY!

SHUT UP, STUPID! THERE ISN'T ANY SPIRIT! BUT I MUST GET RID OF THOSE GUNS BEFORE THE ARMY CATCHES UP WITH US /

AS SOON AS THE BIRDMAN

HUH! IF

Ride the adventure trail again with the Two-Gun Avenger and Black Satan next week! TENEEN SHE TOO

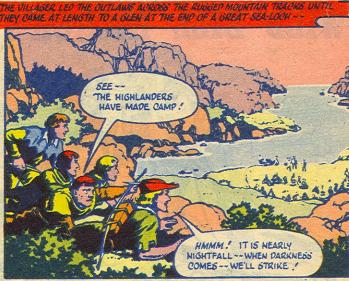

HARRY MERITEN ON PEGIN II.

THE GUARD WAS NOT ABLE TO UTTER A SOUND WHEN WAT

WILD BILL HICKOK'S WONDER HORSE

With a pitiful whinny, Gypsy bent her handsome head over the still form of her master, Wild Bill.

ILD BILL HICKOK, the fastest shooting marshal on the frontier, thought the world of Gypsy, his sorrel mare. She was a real pal, a friend who would never let him down, who would die for him if necessary-as this story will show.

The fighting marshal, who had been out on the trail for many weeks, was crossing a wide stretch of rocky, barren country one day when he came to a water-hole. As his canteen to a water-hole was thirsty be was empty and he was thirsty, he decided to stop and have a drink.

It was mid-day and very hot, and any hopes Wild Bill had of a cooling drink vanished as soon as he plunged his hands into the water and found that it was lukewarm. After splashing his face, he cupped his hands in the water and swallowed several "Hmm!" murmured Hickok, rolling his tongue round his mouth while he unscrewed the top of his canteen. "That didn't taste any too fresh. Seems to have a slight alkaline taste about it."

He filled his canteen, and after splashing his wrists and face again, turned to mount Gypsy. To his surprise she was standing at the edge of the pool sniffing suspiciously.

"What's wrong with you, old girl?" laughed Wild Bill. "Don't be so fussy! It's not exactly pure mountain water, but at least it's

But the mare lifted her head and moved away from the water without even tasting it.

"Well, please yourself, Gypsy," said Hickok. "You can't be very thirsty after all." and with a shrug of his broad shoulders, he events into the shoulders, he swung into the saddle.

As the marshal galloped off, he failed to see a rough wooden board lying on the ground, partly concealed by sage brush. On it was printed in crude lettering the words: DANGER—THIS WATER IS POISON-OUS.

WO hours of hard riding found Wild Bill in more fertile country. There were trees instead of boulders, and coarse prairie grass instead of barren sandy soil.

The bitter water had seemed to increase Hickok's thirst instead of quenching it, and he kept taking sips from his canteen. Pretty soon he felt sharp, griping pains in his stomach. His head started throbbing and he felt horribly sick.

Suddenly, the realisation of what was wrong dawned on him. "Ye "Ye gods," he muttered hoarsely, "that water was poisonous! What a fool I was not to have been warned by the alkaline taste. No wonder Gypsy wouldn't touch it!

Knowing that shortly he would probably collapse from the deadly effects of the poisoned water, he urged his mare on at a faster gallop. The noble creature responded gallantly, but the nearest township was many miles off.

Everything began to swim before Hickok's eyes. He broke out in a sea of perspiration and his throat and mouth felt as though they were on fire. He doubled up with pain.

And then, in his dazed state, Wild Bill thought he heard the ominous howl of a wolf.

In spite of his growing delirium, his brain registered the horrifying fact that a wolf pack was following close on Gypsy's heels!

By now the marshal was swaying dizzily and shaking like a leaf, but he made one last effort to pull himself together. He touched Gypsy lightly with his golden spurs and sent the mare streaking ahead in a breath-taking gallop with the ravening wolves in hot pursuit. With a hand that trembled from weakness, Wild Bill jerked out one of his Colts and emptied it into the pack of starving, howling animals. Even with so unsteady an aim his bullets found their mark and the savage beasts slowed down long enough to attack and kill their fellow wolves whom the marshal had wounded.

Gypsy soon left the wolves behind, but Wild Bill slumped forward in his saddle, the reins dropping from his senseless hands. And then, with all the strength drained from his body, he fell heavily to the ground.

At once Gypsy halted and turned back to Wild Bill, who lay still on the ground. She nuzzled him several times but he did not move. And then she let out a shrill whinny as the wolves, who had resumed their chase, suddenly appeared over a hillock and rushed down towards her.

Instinctively protecting her master, Gypsy plunged and kicked out at the snapping, snarling, grey wolves who were wildly leaping up at her.

She snorted and squealed in a specific plant of the lean races as the fourth of rage as she fought off the lean, snapping beasts. Their vicious fanes and sharp claws sank and tangs and snarp claws sank and tore into her shining, sleek coat and gashed her graceful, slim legs. But she bravely pranced and reared, and her flying hoofs wounded some of the wolves. As two of them leapt up and tried to fasten themselves on her neck she dug her teeth sharply into their backs, causing them to howl with pain.

The fight lasted several minutes, but at last the mare managed to drive off the wolves, and the ugly brutes slunk away, licking their wounds.

Gypsy was in a bad state. Her body, head and legs were badly lacerated, but in spite of her pain and discomfiture, the noble animal bent down and, catching hold of the collar of Wild Bill's jacket with her teeth, she dragged him along as best she could.

She struggled valiantly on for mile or more, each step getting slower and slower.

She tottered over the brow of a hill, but the incline had taxed her ebbing strength to the limit and she collapsed at last through loss of blood, beside

Now it so happened that a few yards away a band of half a dozen roving cowboys had just made camp, and one of them saw Gypsy drop. Running across to her, he saw and recognised the unconscious marshal.

"Hey, fellers," he yelled.
"Come here, quick!"

The cowboys rushed over and crowded round the prostrate figures of the marshal and his horse.

"Gee--Wild Bill Hickok and his hoss!" exclaimed one. "They look nigh on dead!"

But the first cowboy was anxiously feeling Hickok's pulse. "Thank goodness the marshal's alive," he said. "Look at his mouth, fellers. Looks like he's been drinkin' poisonous water. Do you reckon we can save him?"

"You bet we can," another cowboy replied. "Now, fellers, one of you boil some water as quick as you can and mix it with salt and mustard. Once we can force that down the marshal's throat, he'll be O.K. Two of you take care of his hoss She's in a bad way. Savaged by wolves I reckon, by the look of her wounds. The rest of you guys help me to carry the marshal over to the tent.

And so, thanks to the kindness of the good-hearted cow-boys, Wild Bill recovered from the water poisoning and Gypsy's wounds began to heal cleanly.

But the marshal really owed his life to his brave and faithful mare who, on that hot summer's day, forged another link in the affection and loyalty between herself and her master.

Another ripping Wild Bill Hickok adventure next week.

Robin Hood and Maid Marian

Mellish opened the door to see Jack Blake and Thurnel going at it hammer and tongs. "Get out, Mellish!" yelled Blake's chums.

Thurnel, a strange new boy at St. Jim's, is already causing trouble with his schoolfellows. Although he does not look very tough, he has already licked Kangaroo the brawny Australian junior, who afterwards shows him to his new study which he is to share with Blake and Co.

This THURNEL week: FIGHTS AGAIN!

CTUDY No. 6 was dark and deserted.

Blake and his chums had not returned yet. They were walking back to the school from Rylcombe.

Kangaroo stepped into the study and switched on the light. There was a low fire still burning in the grate. Thurnel followed him in, and cast a contemptuous glance round the study.
"Is this the room?" he asked.

"Yes, this is it."
"And there are four other fellows besides myself here?"

'Yes. Blake, Herries, Digby, and D'Arcy.

'Pretty close quarters?" "Some of the studies are "Well, I suppose a chap must put up with what he can get, said Thurnel.

did Kangaroo not reply. Thurnel raked the fire and piled on more coal. Then he dragged the armchair to the hearth, sat down, and put his feet on the fender. Then out came the cigarette-case.

"I don't want to force my advice upon you," said Kangaroo quietly, "It's no business of mine. But I warn you once more not to smoke in here."

"Theat you for rethine."

"Thank you for nothing."
"If Blake and Co. find you smoking when they come in, there will be trouble."

"Oh, hang Blake and Co."
"Very well; it's your business." Kangaroo left the study. Thurnel grinned, stretched himself in the chair, and lighted his cigarette. He lighted another when it was smoked, and then another. A haze of tobacco-smoke filled the study. The new boy was still smoking, in a haze of blue smoke, when Blake and Co. returned.

Arthur Augustus D'Arcy stood at the open door of Study

No. 6.
"Heavens!" he muttered. And then, after a moment's pause, the dandy of St. Jim's exclaimed:

"Gweat Scott!"

He peered into the blue haze of the study.

Blake, Herries, and Digby were a little behind him. saw the dandy of the Fourth stop and stare, and heard his exclamation without knowing the cause.

What's the matter, Gussy?" "Gweat Heavens!"

"Anything wrong in the study?" "Look!"

Arthur Augustus D'Arcy adjusted his monocle, and stared into the study. He was too amazed for words. The others joined him, and they stared in too. Thurnel turned his head in the armchair and glanced at them.

"Oh, come in!" he said. "My hat!"

"Gweat Scott!" Thurnel grinned.

"Oh, come in, and shut the door!" he said.
"Come in!" said Blake

in!" abruptly.

The juniors entered the study, coughing in the smoke. Blake hastily closed the door. He did not want the new boy's strange manners and customs to attract attention. Blake felt quite up to dealing with Master Thurnel himself. He crossed to the window and opened it to its fullest extent.

Then he turned to the new boy and regarded him angrily.

Now, what does this mean?" he demanded.

Thurnel yawned.
"I don't quite follow you," he said. "If you mean, what does my being here mean-why, this is my study. I have been told that I'm to share it with you chaps!"

"That's bad enough!" said
Blake. "Fancy having to have to share a study with you!"

"Oh, come off it!" "But what I want to know is, what do you mean by turning the study into a smoke room?" demanded Blake fiercely. "Don't you know the juniors are not allowed to smoke at this school?"

"I've just heard so!"
"And even if they were allowed, do you think we want our study smelling of tobacco?

'I really haven't thought of it," said Thurnel.

"Then it's time you did!" burst out Blake angrily.
"Yes, wather!"

"I'm not going to change my habits to please anybody,' Thurnel.

"You jolly well are!" said Blake. "Throw that cigarette into the fire!"

"No!"

"Throw it in, I tell you!"

"Rubbish!"

Blake wasted no more time in words. He ran straight at Thurnel and jerked him out of the armchair. Thurnel was hardly prepared for that attack, and he rolled out of the armchair on his back.

The next moment there was a choking yell.

The cigarette had slipped into the new boy's mouth, and he was choking and spluttering wildly.

'Groo-oo!-yah!-yow!oooh!

He spluttered. The cigarette came out; but it had burnt the inside of Thurnel's mouth, and he danced with pain.

There was a yell of laughter from the chums of the Fourth. The cigarette had avenged them on the smoker.

"Ha, ha, ha!" "Ow!"

"Ha, ha!" "Yow-ow!"

"Ha. ha! Vewy funny!" gasped Arthur Augustus D'Arcy. Ha, ha, ha!"

You rotters!" yelled 'Ow! Thurnel.

"Ha, ha, ha!"

The new boy rubbed his mouth. Jack Blake was waving a newspaper to and fro to waft the smoke out of the window. "You ass!" he exclaimed. "I suppose you think it's manly to play the giddy goat like this? You wouldn't look so manly if a prefect collared you, and laid a cane round your legs!"

"Ow!" "If you're hurt, it serves you right! If a senior came along and found this study reeking with smoke, he'd think we were all in it, and it would mean trouble all round."
"Ow!"

"For your information," went on Blake, "I can tell you that boys are not allowed to smoke at this school because it checks their growth, spoils their wind, and makes silly young duffers of them!"

"Groo!"

"And finally no one is allowed to smoke in this study, because it spoils the atmosphere." Yow!"

"And you'd better stop making that row, and chuck all your cigarettes into the fire and try to be decent."
"Yes. I should stwongly wecommend you to twy to be decent, Thuwnel."

The new boy rubbed mouth and glared at them. rubbed his 'Mind yourown business!" he

12-SUN-April 25, 1953

growled. "Weally-

"I shall smoke if I like!" "You jolly well won't," said

And I won't throw my cigarettes into the fire!'

Jack Blake's face set hard. "Won't you?" he said. "Now, look here, we'd better have a clear understanding to begin with, Thurnel. You've been put into this study against our will. But we know it's no good kicking, and we're prepared to make the best of it, and we're ready to chum with you if you like to be decent. But if you don't you'll have to look out for trouble. That's plain English.'
"Yes!"

"In the first place, no more drinking in public houses; and secondly, no more smoking in the study," said Blake. "In the study I'm chief. You're a new fellow, and you've got to toe the

"Rats!"

Blake's face went scarlet with anger.

"So that's how you take it, is it?" he said. "Very well—we'll begin the discipline now. Throw your cigarettes into the fire! "I won't!"

"Then we'll jolly well do it for you! Collar him!"

Four pairs of hands were laid upon Master Thurnel.

He resisted savagely, and hit out. Digby dropped on the floor, dazed, and Herries rolled over him. Then Blake closed with the new boy, hooked his foot behind Thurnel's leg, and brought him to the floor with a crash, that made the furniture in the study jump.

"Got him!" he gasped.
"By Jove! What a stwong beast!"

"Let me up!" yelled Thurnel. "Sit on him!"

"Pin him down!"

"You hounds!" gasped Thur-el. "I'll fight any two of you!" Blake snapped his teeth.

'You shall fight any one of us, any time and any place you choose," he said. "But this isn't a fight—it's a punishment. We're teaching you discipline.' "Ow!"

"Sit on him, Herries. Now then, which pocket are your cigarettes in, Thurnel?"
"Yah!"

"Which pocket-do you hear?

Find out!"

"That's just what I'm going to o," said Blake coolly. "Hold him down, while I turn out his pockets.

Thurnel changed colour. "Stop!" he yelled. "Stop! I-I won't have my pockets turned out! Don't you dare to go through my pockets.

Blake's eyes blazed. "Well, of all the cheek!" he exclaimed. "Do you think I want to spy into your things? I'm going for the cigarettes."

"Let me get up-"Rats!"

"I tell you-

"We've got him!" Jack Blake went through the new boy's pockets in search of the cigarette-case. He turned the pockets out one by one, laying the contents on the floor. All kinds of things were turned out, including a matchbox, two or three loose cigars, and letters. Thurnel was resisting all the time. The idea of the St. Jim's junior going through his pockets seemed to be worrying him. Lemme gerrup

"Not just yet, my lad. I want the cigarettes.

They're in my breast pocket." "Hallo! What's this

Blake had dragged a paper out of one of the inner pockets. The juniors could not help looking at it in their surprise. It was a sketch plan of a building, and fellows who knew St.

Jim's so well were not at a loss to recognise it. It was a plan of St. Jim's.

howled "Let it alone!" Thurnel.

The juniors stared at him. "My hat!" said Blake. "You must take an interest in the school when you bring a plan of the place along with you! "What on earth were you doing with that, Thurnel?" Mind your own business."

"Weally, Thurnel-"Oh, where's the cigarettecase?

Jack Blake dragged the case out to the light. He opened it, took out the cigarettes, and threw them into the fire in a

They blazed up, and the new boy, helpless in the grasp of the juniors, watched them burn with a sullen face.

"That's done," said Blake.
"They'll do you more good taken that way, Thurnel."
"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Let him get up now," said Blake.

The new boy was released.

He rose gasping to his feet, and then collected up the various articles that had been removed from his pockets, and stowed them back where they had been taken from. His eyes were glittering with anger.

The juniors watched him curiously. They wondered how he was going to take the rough handling he had had-not that they much cared. They were quite able to deal with Master Thurnel if he cut up rough.

Thurnel turned to them at

"Now then," he said, between his teeth, "which one of you is going to be licked first?"

A TOUGH CUSTOMER

JACK BLAKE grinned.
"Perhaps you'd better
begin with me," he remarked.
"It would give me a great deal of pleasure to dust up the floor with you.

"Put up your hands, then." "Hold on a minute, Blake. I wegard it as my place to give this fellow a thwashing.'

"Dry up, Gussy."
"I wefuse to dwy up. As the pwincipal person in the studay-"Rats!"

"If you say wats to me, Blake-

"Well, I did say rats to you." "Then I shall have to fight you as well! Put up your hands and I will thwash you before I thwash Thurnel."
"Ass!"

"I wefuse to be called an ass." Are you going to take off your jacket?" asked Thurnel. "I warn you that I mean business. You kids have got to understand your place in this Blake stripped off his jacket and turned back his cuffs.

"I'm ready," he remarked.

"Weally, Blake-"Stand aside, Gussy."

"I wefuse to stand aside.

"Collar him!"

"I wefuse to be collared! Oh!

Herries and Digby seized the dandy of St. Jim's and whirled him to the armchair and sat him down in it with a bump. Then Herries sat on his knees and Digby on his shoulders and the elegant junior struggled in vain to rise.

"Ow! Yow! Leggo! Gerroff!"
"Keep quiet, then."
"I wefuse to keep quiet."
"Sit on him," said Blake.

"We're sitting on him," grinned Digby. "Now then, go ahead and show that new chap how you can box, Jack. "I'm going to."

The study door opened and Tom Merry looked in. He glanced in surprise at the junior in his shirt sleeves and at the angry face of Thurnel.

"Hallo! Trouble?" he asked.
"Just a little argument," said Blake. "We're just going to begin." "Good. I looked in to ask you fellows to come along to our study. Manners is roasting chestnuts and there's a lot of them."

We'll come in a minute," said Digby.

"Right-ho. I'll stay and watch.

"Ready, kid?" said Blake, advancing towards the new junior.

Thurnel nodded savagely.

"Yes, come on."

"Here you are," said Blake cheerfully.

And he led off by an attack. Blake was one of the best boxers in the Fourth Form at St. Jim's and almost a match for Tom Merry of the Shell. That the new boy would be able to stand up against him for two minutes, he never imagined. But a surprise was waiting for him.

Jack's attack was met grimly, and to his surprise his guard was swept away and a heavy fist crashed upon his jaw. He staggered back and sat down with a bump that raised the dust from the study carpet and brought an ache into his bones.

"Oh!" he gasped.
"By Jove!"

Blake sat looking dazed, holding his jaw in his hand.

Herries and Digby jumped up in their surprise and ran to help him up. Arthur Augustus D'Arcy rose from his armchair. He was looking very worried now.

"By Jove, Blake——"
"I'm all right," muttered

Blake. But he did not feel all right.

His jaw was aching horribly, as if it had received a drive from a hammer, and his head was a little dizzy. Where did the slightly built new boy get the strength from that he had put into that blow?"

Tom Merry stared. were several things about Master Thurnel that surprised him, but this exhibition of strength surprised him more than anything

"Well, get up," said Thurnel.
"I suppose you haven't had enough yet?"

Blake staggered to his feet with the assistance of Herries.

"Not much," he said. "I shall take a little more knocking out than that."

"Come on, then."

A thin, narrow face with sly eyes peeped in at the door-it belonged to Mellish of Fourth, the cad of the School House. He had heard the row in Study No. 6 and, having seen Tom Merry enter, he imagined that the hero of the Shell was fighting with the Fourth-Formers.

He stared in astonishment at the new boy and Jack Blake. Mellish would as soon have tackled a lion in its den as have faced Jack Blake, of the Fourth. And what he saw made it clear that Jack was getting the worst of the tussle.

"My hat!" said Mellish, in amazement.

"Get out!" said Herries.

Mellish shrugged his shoulders. He was up against the chums of Study No. 6 all the time, and he was not likely to miss an opportunity like this if he could help it. He came in and closed the door.

"Why shouldn't I see the fun?" he demanded.
"Stay if you like," said Thurnel, with a glance. "This is my study, and you can stay here if you like."

'Thanks," said Mellish, and he staved.

Herries made an angry movement towards the cad of the Fourth, but Blake signed to him to let Mellish alone. One row at a time was enough.
"Well, are you coming on?"

asked Thurnel, with a sneer. Blake's eyes blazed. "Yes!"

"Well, I'm waiting."

And Jack Blake came on, his eyes gleaming, and his teeth set. Blake intended to lick the new boy, or to be licked himself, and he wouldn't give in as long as he had strength enough to keep upon his feet.

What will be the result of this new fight? Don't miss next week's instalment of this grand story.

SUN-April 25, 1953-13

When they saw the King of the Highway advancing towards them with the glittering rapier in his hand, Jeremiah Grogg and Gabriel Handspike dashed into the dungeon and slammed the door behind them. . !

Laughing merrily, Dick Turpin bolted the door on the two cowardly rascals. This done, he dragged off the rough smock, knotted his tousled hair in its splendid silk bow at the back, and took the gleaming rapier again between his strong fingers. He turned to Moll, magnificent and determined . the King of the High-way, Prince of Gentlemen SwordsYOU HAVEN'T BEEN IN CORNWALL LONG, DICK,
BUT YOU'VE STRUCK
TERROR INTO THE WRONGODERS
ALREADY!
WHAT NEXT?

DESPERATE MEN WHO'D STOP AT NOTHING LIKE THEIR MASTER HIMSELF!

Meanwhile, back at the "End of the World" inn, Captain Jonas Whale found the drugged wine that Dick and Moll had thrown on the floor!...

He harnessed up his plump old mare and clumsily swung his great bulk into the saddle. . . Then an awful thought crossed his rascally mind.

I'VE GOT IT

THEM TWO COUNTRY LADS WAS NONE OTHER THAN
DICK TURPIN AND THE LASS.
BYNEPTINE, MASTER
CRAWLEY'IL KEEL-HAUL
ME WHEN HE HEARS O'THIS'
GIDDUP THERE, RUMCASK.

EVERY MONDAY

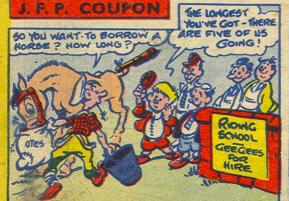

This week's prince shalog jokes from readers! The First Princ is 7s. 6d., He remainder receive Se. Pow shout a joke from you send it TOOTTEEN WITH CHES J. F. P. COUPON. to The Johns, 6 Carmelin St., London, E.C.4. The Editor's decision is final.

SHOULDER IF THE GUN WAS A HEAVY COLT 42 OR ATTACHED TO THE WEARER'S BRACES IF

THE PISTOL WAS A SMALL DERRINGER.

DID YOU MAKE LY YESSIR! ISN'T IT BERLITY-AND YOUR BOOK? WITHOUT HEING

OVER-RUN BY GOLD

DIED IN POWERTY.

SEEKERS AND SUTTER

BROKE OFF A BRANCH. HE SMACKED THE BEARS ON

THEIR NOSES, UNTIL THEY RAN OFF, HOWLING WITH PAIN